BOYS! MEN!

MY SECRET NEW DYNAFLEX METHOD

CAN BUILD YOU A MAGNIFICENT NEW HE-MAN-MUSCLED BODY IN JUST TEN MINUTES A DAY—with absolutely NO weights—NO bar-bells—NO EXERCISE AT ALL!

Yes! If the girls LAUGH at you now when you take off your shirt—they'll be breaking down the doors to get dates with you—once they've seen the rugged DYNAFLEX BODY I can give you! I'll build you a tough brutal massive body—shoulders clad with solid inches of he-man BRAWN. I'll give you bulging biceps, trip-hammer fists, power-packed legs, and a chest that will have you popping the buttons off your shirt with pride!

(—says MIKE MARVEL, "Builder of Champion Bodies")

ARE YOU ASHAMED OF YOUR BODY NOW?

Pal—do YOURSELF a favor! Take a good long look in a mirror. Do you see a puny, starved body—scrawny arms—bony shoulders—a flabby stomach and skinny legs? Do girls laugh and fellows grin when you take off your shirt?

BELIEVE IT OR NOT—I can add solid pounds of rippling, steely he-man MEAT to your build. I can take those skeleton arms and PACK EVERY INCH with explosive virile MAN-MUSCLE. I can take that caved-in chest and build on six rugged inches of strong sleek MAN-SIZED BRAWN. I can clothe your skinny frame with GIANT RIBBLING DYNAFLEX MUSCLES that will have the girls gasping with awe and admiration! And with NO tiring exercise, NO high-priced bar-bells or gym equipment!

Or is your problem a body sagging with soft rolls of unhealthy, unhandsome FAT? Puny muscles—sagging stomach—bloated face—arms heavy with layers of BLUBBER? Are you ASHAMED to go to the beach and let them see your "FAT-MAN PHYSIQUE"?

If so, wake up fella! THIS IS IT! I will peel off that fat and give you a lean virile DYNAFLEX BODY. Armored with a sheath of hard tough handsome muscle. I can build you into a healthy, streamlined HERCULES—bursting with dynamic manly strength. I'll give you a taut rock-hard midsection—legs muscled like coiled steel springs. I can pack solid DYNAMITE into your fists and give you a rugged handsome build brim-full of the magnetic SUPER-BODY SEX-APPEAL girls are hungry for. And with NO starvation diets—NO fatiguing calisthenics—NO expensive health-foods!

HOW DYNAFLEX BUILDS BEAUTIFUL BODIES

DYNAFLEX is the modern miracle of body-building. It takes no tiresome exercises, "crash" diets, protein foods, and no weights or bar-bells. DYNAFLEX is the amazing discovery of a West German Doctor whose research into the Science of Strength found a thrilling new way to build GIANT BRAWNY MUSCLES in ten minutes a day. With DYNAFLEX you "flex" each muscle once—in a certain way—that is more effective than if you exercised that muscle 20, 30, even 100 times the old-fashioned way. With DYNAFLEX you get bigger results in ten minutes than after hours of grunting and groaning, hefting heavy weights. DYNAFLEX coaxes each muscle in your body to bring out its round, steely fullness and satiny symmetry. DYNAFLEX packs that muscle with glowing vibrant new strength and energy—FAST. In ten minutes a day I can cover your bony frame with healthy rippling muscle—give you a deep, powerful chest—solid shoulders and iron wrists—tough, slim midsection—and trim, steel-strong legs—simply the DYNAFLEXING! each muscle once a day! There's nothing wrong with the bar-bell and weight-lifting method . . . but why bother? Why waste time and money, why sweat and strain your way to a streamlined symmetrical SAMSON-STRONG BODY—when you can do it better—bigger—faster—easier with the DYNAFLEX SECRET?

STRONG-MAN SEX-APPEAL ATTRACTS GIRLS

Be honest. Down deep you KNOW you envy the boy with the virile, magnificent build. Every man and boy secretly desires a broad brawny back, a solid man-muscled chest, handsome he-man shoulders, arms rippling with tough, steely sinews, a narrow waist, slim hips and springs, power-packed legs. Girls go for a fellow with TWO-FISTED BIG MUSCLE SEX-APPEAL . . . and they only laugh at skinny guys or "fatso's".

Let me give you a glowing new body, brimming over with energy and irresistible inches of solid muscle on your chest—he-man appeal. I can build three inches of beef and brawn on your shoulders, will mold you a handsome super-body of terrific strength, give you a crushing grip, legs crammed with steel springs. A lean taut rock-solid punch-proof midsection. Pack your body with energy and thrilling stamina that will have girls falling at your feet.

Mike Marvel System, DEPT. 411

GIVE ME TEN MINUTES A DAY —THAT'S ALL!

After DYNAFLEX, you'll be able to roll up your sleeves and take off your shirt and, for the first time in your life, you'll be PROUD of your manly build. Yes, pal, say goodbye to your weak, flabby frame—get ready for adventure and romance with a solid physique that glows and vibrates with virile he-man appeal. You'll be really proud to have people see your MAGNIFICENT HE-MAN-MUSCLES at the beach or gym. And, when the fellows stare with envy and jealousy—when the girls crowd around to squeeze your iron biceps or touch your bulging brawny chest—when they ask in amazement HOW you did it—tell them about the Magic Secret of DYNAFLEX!

Your Pal,

MIKE MARVEL

A selection from the best unpublished jokes that are currently going the rounds

Two inebriated gentlemen stood at the bar near closing time.

"I've got an idea," said one. "Lesh have one more drink and then go find us shum girls."

"Naw," replied the other, "I've got more than I can handle at home."

"Great," replied the idea man, "then let's drink up and go to your place."

A husband returning from a trip was informed by his wife that a burglar had entered their apartment while he was gone.

"Did he get anything?" the husband anxiously inquired.

"I'll say he did," replied the wife. "In the dark I thought he was you."

★ ★ ★

"You want to know why I've come home half loaded?" asked the soused spouse. "It's because I ran out of money, that's why."

The mother got on the train with her six children and when the conductor came by for her tickets, she explained "Those two are 12 and have to pay full fare, but these two are eight and the other two six and a half, so they pay only half rate."

The conductor scratched his head, and as he punched her tickets, he said, "Excuse me for asking, madam, but do you get two every time?"

"Oh, no," she answered, "sometimes we don't get any at all."

Our unabashed dictionary defines an efficient nurse as one who can make a patient without disturbing the bed.

"All right lady," said the bill collector, "How about the next installment on the couch?"

The lady shrugged, "Better than having to give you money, I guess."

The wife of a friend of ours purchased a rather large grandfather clock at an auction and then sent her unhappy hubby to pay for it and carry the damned thing home. To make matters worse, the husband had been to a formal dinner earlier in the evening and was wearing his full dress suit. He was having some difficulty with the unwieldy mechanism even before he met the drunk staggering in the opposite direction. They collided and the husband fell backward to the sidewalk, the clock on top of him.

"Why in blazes don't you watch where you're going?" the angry husband demanded.

The drunk shook his head dazedly, looked at the man in the full dress suit with the clock on top of him and shook his head.

"And why in the hell don't you wear a wrist watch like everybody else?" he inquired.

The soldier returned from eighteen months in Korea and was assigned to a base near his home. Naturally anxious to see his wife, he managed to talk the commanding officer out of a two hour pass. After six hours absence he came back to camp.

"You're four hours overdue," barked the first sergeant.

"Well, you see," said the soldier, "when I got home I found my wife in the shower and it took me four hours to dry out my uniform."

A man with a stammer walked into a swanky bar and ordered a beer.

"That will be seventy-five cents," the bartender told him.

The man put the seventy-five cents on the bar and then asked, "Wha . . . Wha . . . what do you g-g-gget for rye?"

"A buck and a half a shot," the bartender didn't bat an eye.

"And b-b-b-b-brandry?"

"Three dollars a drink."

"Th-th-th-thank you very much," said the customer. "It was n-n-n-n-nice of you not to say anything about my a-a-a-affliction."

"Oh, that's alright," said the drink dispenser. "You were nice, too. You didn't say anything about my being a hunchback."

"Oh, is that what th-th-th-that is?" said the customer. "I thought it was your f-f-f-fanny—everything else in the j-p-j-j-joint's so high."

★ ★ ★

The boy had been going to a progressive school for several years, yet he hadn't learned his readin', ritin' and 'rithmetic. When his father learned of his son's illiteracy he said, "We've got to get this kid out of that school. He's been going there for three years now and he still don't know his Rs from a hole in the ground."

The game breeder was showing a lady around his farm.

"We're doing some interesting work here," he explained. "We're crossing pheasants with other kinds of birds and some of the results are amazing. For instance, that bird over there is a cross between a pheasant and a goose. We call it phoose. In that other pen we have a cross between a pheasant and a dove. We call it phove."

"What's that one in the third cage?" the lady asked.

"Oh, that's a cross between a pheasant and a duck," the game breeder answered. "We call him Algernon."

WE STARTED IN THE SAME JOBS ...AND NOW HE'S MY BOSS!

Why don't you get a promotion, with bigger pay?

Here's how others do it:

IT HAPPENS every day. Two men start together in similar jobs. One follows instructions, performs his tasks, and hopes time and luck will bring him advancement. So he waits. And waits.

Not the other man. He does his job too, but he doesn't waste time hoping for something to happen. He knows he has to help it happen—by getting the special training that will make him worth a promotion.

Which of these two men will YOU be?

Through LaSalle home study, you can become an expert in the kind of work you like—with bigger salary, more privileges, more security than any routine job can give you. The cost is low—and you don't lose a single day's pay while you train.

If promotions have a way of passing you by, if it's too long since you had a real raise, then it's time you found out what LaSalle training can do for you. Today there are more key jobs than there are trained men to fill them. Mail the coupon now to learn how you can qualify for one of these jobs.

LaSalle training works for others
— why not for you?

LaSalle has been a world leader in business training for 54 years. It is the only accredited correspondence university in the country. It has trained more than one million students for better-pay positions and satisfying new careers.

"My salary has more than doubled since enrolling and is still growing," writes William T. Black of Canoga Park, California. "My salary has increased 400%," writes Rudolf Urbatis of Port Chester, N.Y., "Without your training I would still be a shipping clerk." Hundreds of similar letters come from LaSalle students each year.

You can benefit just as they have done. Send today for FREE information on LaSalle training. Just check the field you are interested in and mail the coupon to LaSalle, 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago 5, Illinois.

Orchids To Us

Sirs:

Your magazine is wonderful! It does a lot to expose those hypocrites who claim to be what they're not. How about doing a story on Steve Allen — bet he'd make some interesting reading. And in your Inside Info department how about letting us know if Lillian Roth has gone back to drinking again.

V.R.

Memphis, Tenn.

So what's Stevie been up to lately. Maybe you know something we don't. As far as Lillian Roth is concerned to all indications she's still a tea-totaler.

—ED

Sirs:

I dig your mag the most. You've always been the firstest with the mostest so how about a story on the twist. It's the wildest.

T.R.

Brooklyn, N.Y.

What can one say about the twist. But if you'll look below we'll show you a fashion show with a twist. Gals in Paris modelled new creations in men's shirts while twisting. We realize this hasn't got much to do with your request but we thought the pic was cute.—ED

Phoney Sales Pitch

Sirs:

Your article on the religious racket, Crook's in Clerical Collars, was great. It's about time the public was warned about such greedy characters. But what about those so-called "budget plans" for magazines? Several months ago a salesman knocked at my door. According to him, I could get four of the country's leading magazines for just 50¢ a month — quite a bargain. I fell for it. But when it came to pay, I was billed for $2.00 a month! The four magazines together do not cost two dollars a month, but I guess there's nothing I can do — except warn other innocent subscribers. Some of my friends' later told me they had been hooked too.

M.L.

Los Angeles, Calif.

INSIDE STORY has no door to door salesman but we do have a wonderful bargain if you'd care to subscribe.—ED

The Customer's Wrong

Sirs:

My boyfriend and I have been reading INSIDE STORY for some time now. We get a big charge out of your articles. We also get a kick out of the letters column but my boyfriend says you write them all yourself. I don't believe him. But how can we prove it to him.

L.T.

Miami, Fla.

We Just Did!—ED

DONAHUE, Pro and Con

Sirs:

I live in Brooklyn and I used to go to school with Troy Donahue. I was in his history class and we dated often. Merle, (his name then) was the nicest person I had ever known. He was never greedy or deceitful or cruel, as your story indicated. I don't believe anything that was in that article and I don't think anyone else does either. I know

J.G.

Brooklyn, N.Y.

Don't keep us in suspense — tell us about Troy.—ED

Sirs:

It's about time some magazine had guts enough to print the true story of Troy Donahue. I went to school with him in Brooklyn and I know him for what he is. For my dough Troy The Goy is a seventh rate Casanova. And even that's giving him the benefit of the doubt.

R.P.

About Jayne

Sirs:

I think that you would probably be interested in knowing the truth that is why I am writing to you on your article on Jayne Mansfield in your July issue. I was the gentleman that was stranded with Jayne and Mickey the night of February 8th. I am not and never have been connected as the publicity agent of Jayne and Mickey. At that time I happened to be the public relations director for a chain of hotels at which the Hargitays were guests. As public relations director it was my duty to escort them during their stay with us. That is the only reason I was along on the boat ride. I am delighted to see that you hesitated in saying that our mishap was a publicity stunt. Even you have enough sense to realize that three intelligent human beings would not put themselves through such an ordeal for any press coverage. For my family and myself, the night of February 8th was the worst night of our lives.

J.J.D.
Ft. Lauderdale, Fla.

And with that leave us close the chapter on the Jayne Mansfield shipwreck.—ED

Sick of Liz

Sirs:

Seemes like everytime a writer has a little free time, some free paper and a free hand he picks on Hollywood. I'm so sick and tired of reading about Liz Taylor and Richard Burton I could scream. Isn't there anything else in Hollywood to write about.

J.R.
Hollywood, Calif.

Sure there is, but let's face facts, Liz makes for some pretty interesting reading.—ED

Telling Us Off

Sirs:

If I ever pick up a copy of your lousy, rat-infested magazine again I'll have my head examined. You're always trying to ruin people I worship and idolize. People like Frank Sinatra and Marilyn Monroe and other fine American actors and actresses. I'll never buy another copy of your magazine and will only read it if I happen to find it in a garbage can somewhere.

TEED-OFF
Muskogee, Okla.

Do you generally go through other people's garbage cans?—ED

Sirs:

I have read your magazine and many like it and I must say I don't approve of them at all. For most of the time they do nothing but destroy peoples' lives. In fact I wish we had laws to ban magazines like yours, yet every once in a while you come up with something that should be exposed. I was pleased to read your article on fall out shelters. It was so well handled I wish you'd print more on the subject.

Y.H.

When there's something else to be said about it you can bet we'll say it.—ED

Telling Us Nicely

As far as we are concerned all of the other magazines are followers and INSIDE STORY is the leader. We've noted that after your magazine runs an article all of the other publications jump on the bandwagon and run practically the same thing later on. Keep up the good work and we'll keep buying INSIDE STORY

Now that's right nice of you people.—ED

Correction?

Sirs:

I buy your magazine all the time, ever since it first hit the newsstands. I have just finished reading your July 1962, Volume 9, Number 4 issue, where I note on page 12 you write that in Columbia's new flick, The Internes, the role of the nurse who does a wild striptease is played by Carol Harrison. I believe if you will really check further you will find that this role is played by Miss Kay Stevens. Please let me know if I am right and if so, (I'm sure I am) would you correct this error in your next issue. Thank you kindly. Keep up the good work on your magazine, I enjoy it very much.

MRS. A.D.
Las Vegas, Nevada

We don't know whether or not Kay Stevens is in The Internes but Carol Harrison (whose pic is below, plays the part of a quiet reserved nurse who lets herself go at a New Years Eve party and does one of the wildest stripteases ever filmed in Hollywood. Sorry to disappoint you Mrs. A.D. but don't stop reading our mag because of this—ED

New York

Proving that there's no honor among thieves the other night while Frank Costello — well known crime syndicate war lord — and Frank Ericksen — authorities have long deplored his type of bookkeeping — were having dinner at a New York night spot some unsavory cad stole Mr. Costello's automobile. Ericksen is laying seven to two that Costello catches up with the culprit before the gendarmes do . . . You can believe it or not but the National Council for the Abolition of Alcoholic Beverages launched a recent meeting with a cocktail party (sic) (Hic) . . . Natalie Wood was almost booted out of a very fancy schmancy New York Nightery the other ayem for salty language. . . . Madison Avenue Adzeutives who can't brush their teeth after every meal have invented a new bit. They take a toothbrush along on their luncheon dates, dip it into their martinis and give their molars a good workout—it's a great way to get a glow.

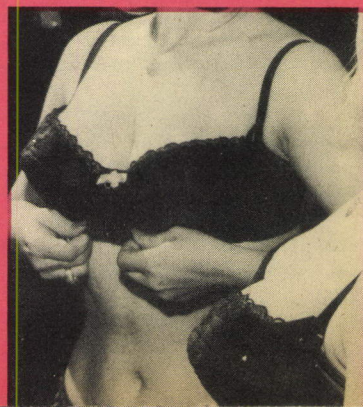

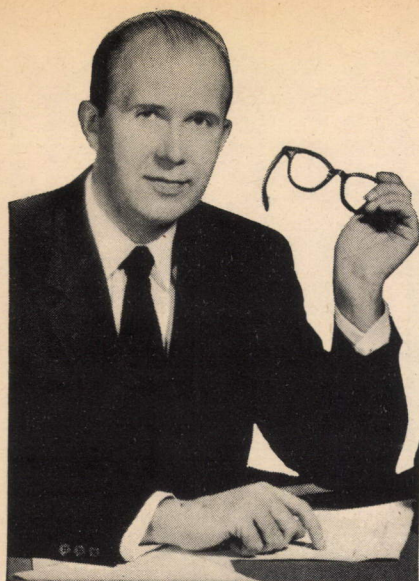

The Nation

One of this country's top playwrights will make lurid headlines shortly. Police department has him measured for a morals charge. Seems they don't like the things he's been teaching young boys . . . Nancy Sinatra, the gal Frankie always runs to when things go bad, has been approached by a national magazine to do a frank article on Frank. If she okays the deal it will be a real sizzler. . . Former Senator Bricker's nephew, Eric is a twist teacher at Arthur Murray's in Hollywood . . . And in the realm of little known, useless knowledge is the fact that Fidel Castro used to be an extra in Hollywood. He was registered with central casting . . . Statistics show that 10% of American women become pregnant before marriage. Three out of four divorced women continue to have sexual relations with their husbands.

Don Bolander says: "Now you can learn to speak and write like a college graduate."

Is Your English Holding You Back?

"Do you avoid the use of certain words even though you know perfectly well what they mean? Have you ever been embarrassed in front of friends or the people you work with, because you pronounced a word incorrectly? Are you sometimes unsure of yourself in a conversation with new acquaintances? Do you have difficulty writing a good letter or putting your true thoughts down on paper?

"If so, then you're a victim of crippled English," says Don Bolander, Director of Career Institute. "Crippled English is a handicap suffered by countless numbers of intelligent, adult men and women. Quite often they are held back in their jobs and their social lives because of their English. And yet, for one reason or another, it is impossible for these people to go back to school."

Is there any way, without going back to school, to overcome this handicap? Don Bolander says, "Yes!" With degrees from the University of Chicago and Northwestern University, Bolander is an authority on adult education. During the past eight years he has helped thousands of men and women stop making mistakes in English, increase their vocabularies, improve their writing, and become interesting conversationalists right in their own homes.

BOLANDER TELLS HOW IT CAN BE DONE

During a recent interview, Bolander said, "You don't have to go back to school in order to speak and write like a college graduate. You can gain the ability quickly and easily in the privacy of your own home through the Career Institute Method." In his answers to the following questions, Bolander tells how it can be done.

Question What is so important about a person's ability to speak and write?

Answer People judge you by the way you speak and write. Poor English weakens your self-confidence — handicaps you in your dealings with other people. Good English is absolutely necessary for getting ahead in business and social life.

You can't express your ideas fully or reveal your true personality without a sure command of good English.

Question What do you mean by a "command of English"?

Answer A command of English means you can express yourself clearly and easily without fear of embarrassment or making mistakes. It means you can write well, carry on a good conversation — also read rapidly and remember what you read. Good English can help you throw off self-doubts that may be holding you back.

Question But isn't it necessary for a person to go to school in order to gain a command of good English?

Answer No, not any more. You can gain the ability to speak and write like a college graduate right in your own home — in only a few minutes each day.

Question Is this something new?

Answer Career Institute of Chicago has been helping people for many years. The Career Institute Method quickly shows you how to stop making embarrassing mistakes, enlarge your vocabulary, develop your writing ability, discover the "secrets" of interesting conversation.

Question Does it really work?

Answer Yes, beyond question. In my files there are thousands of letters, case histories and testimonials from people who have used the Career Institute Method to achieve amazing success in their business and personal lives.

Question Who are some of these people?

Answer Almost anyone you can think of. The Career Institute Method is used by men and women of all ages. Some have attended college, others high school, and others only grade school. The method is used by business men and women, typists and secretaries, teachers, industrial workers, clerks, ministers and public speakers, housewives, sales people, accountants, foremen, writers, foreign-born citizens, government and military personnel, retired people, and many others.

Question How long does it take for a person to gain the ability to speak and write like a college graduate, using the Career Institute Method?

Answer In some cases people take only a few weeks to gain a command of good English. Others take longer. It is up to you to set your own pace. In as little time as 15 minutes a day, you will see quick results.

Question How may a person find out more about the Career Institute Method?

Answer I will gladly mail a free 32-page booklet to anyone who is interested.

Sinatra says he's going to give up acting and take up directing. As far as his friends are concerned he's been directing things for a long time now . . .

The daughter of a very famous Hollywood director is a notorious kleptomaniac. In order to save embarrassment, he has made a deal with many of the chi-chi department stores in New York and Los Angeles, whereby he pays for everything she swipes. The deal worked out fine until the department store shamuses found out that daughter had become so adept at boosting, papa was only paying for one third of the take. If he doesn't ante up more cabbage quick his young'n will find herself in the pokey . . . The latest movie imported from Italy, Come Love Me, is one of the nakedest and one of the loveliest ever put on film. . . And while on the subject of pictures don't miss Phaedra. The love scenes between Tony Perkins and Melinda Mercouri rate as some of the most sizzling eved filmed. They may never be shown on local screens but they're history-making just the same . . . Rock Hudson and Marilyn Maxwell may make headlines before you read this . . . Zsa Zsa Gabor asked the police for a permit to carry a gun, the reason: Men are always trying to molest her . . . Liberace is the only registered voter with one name.

Here and There

For what it's worth — and it can't be worth very much — did you know that the staid and stodgy Encyclopædia Britannica devotes almost an entire column to Mickey Mouse . . . Hollywood sightseeing busses have been cautioned to stay away from Esther Williams' house in the early ayem. Seems the magnificent mermaid always takes a swim, au-naturel, before breakfast. If the sightseeing companies could advertise the event they'd clean up a fortune.

Short Shorts

The Judy Garland saga is becoming a rather funny farce, with overtones of a tragedy since her children are involved.

First Judy flew over to London to get the kiddies away from Sid Luft, her estranged hubby. Next Sid jetted to Britain to get the kids from Judy. He no sooner landed and made his presence known when a gal who worked in a N.Y. office left her job and flew over to get Sid to come back because she's just plain crazy about him . . .

Secrets Out About Presley's Love-Life

By CHARLES HAZARD

"ANYTIME I GO OUT with a girl a few times I wonder what kind of a wife she would make. I think it's pretty natural for a guy, after he goes out with a girl a few times to wonder how he'd feel about being with her the rest of his life."

A character named Elvis Presley is credited with having mouthed the above words. And though what he said makes a lot of sense where the average Joe from Kokomo is concerned, when applied to Sir Swivel Hips Presley, it becomes as ridiculous and out of character as a Yogi Berra critique of Spengler's Decline Of The West.

What Presley, or should we say his press agent, is trying to convey in the above statement is the fact that the Ole Houn' Dawg yawler is just an average kid looking for an average gal with whom to share an average vine covered cottage.

To put it more bluntly: Elvis Presley wants to get married.

What's stopping him?

Well, it seems that this poor, underprivileged, rich kid just can't seem to find a girl worthy of himself.

"Always in the back of my mind I wonder if a girl is interested in me or in Elvis Presley," says he. "I've gotten better able to tell, but it's still pretty hard. Some girls are pretty good actresses you know . . . It will probably take a little time to find the right one."

Now anyone hearing the above words might be inclined to feel sorry for this child of destiny who seems to be having all sorts of trouble trying to find a girl who'll love, honor and cherish him for himself alone. But the actual truth is that Presley is not only not looking to get hitched, he's actually running like a bunny from anything that even resembles a marriage gleam in a young lady's eye.

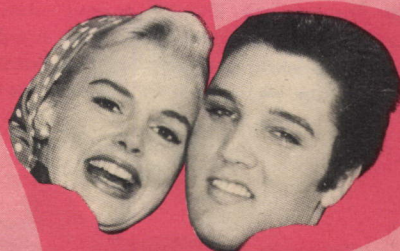

Just recently, in fact, while making the movie Kid Galahad Presley was playing footsie with a cool charmer named Connie Stevens. It certainly was no secret as just about any columnist who could spell "Presley" and "Stevens" itemed the romance.

One even went so far as to head the story, "Connie Stevens has said 'Yes' to Elvis!"

"This is the hottest rumor to come out of Hollywood this year . . . and by the time you read this Connie Stevens may already be Mrs. Elvis Presley."

Someone close to Elvis put it this way, "They're at the stage now where he calls her at least five times a day and she spends weekends with him on location."

Said location was the San Jacinto Mountains and it's a well known fact that Connie actually spent more time there than she did at home. Every free moment Elvis had he was making with the sweet words to Connie. They went round and round and during the course of the romance Elvis even met her family.

It really did look like Elvis had finally found the right girl.

But it was not to be.

When the picture was finished, so was the romance.

Elvis went back to his Tennessee cronies for some wild boozin' and brawlin' and Connie got solace from an older man, namely, Glenn Ford.

Now certainly, even someone with Presley's mentality must realize that a chick like Connie Stevens wasn't after him for his loot or his fame. Connie's a gal with a bright future of her own. And as far as money is concerned, she has plenty in her own right.

Tuesday Weld is another doll who went the romance route with the King Of The Rock 'n Rollers. But she too found that the moment things even look like they're getting a little serious you can't see Elvis for dust.

There's nothing wrong with a guy wanting to stay a bachelor. Nobody's knocking it. But when a guy is constantly mouthing off about getting married and telling the world about his quest for Mrs. Right, then it becomes wrong.

Elvis has said on more than one occasion, "After three dates with a girl I know if she's using me or if she likes me for myself."

Coming from Elvis, this is ridiculous. Through his whole career he's done nothing but "use" girls. A quick look at his background shows that Elvis has played footsie with more chicks than Noah had animals. And, up to now, he never cared who knew it.

The Pelvis first appeared on the scene back in August of 1954 when he recorded a song called That's All Right. A local disc jockey gave it an airing — and Elvis was on his way.

The next stop was a fifteen minute radio show called Louisiana Hayride, where he sang doughnut commercials.

About this time rock 'n roll was beginning to catch on with the sharpies and zoot suiters, so it was only natural for them to choose as their hero an entertainer who very closely resembled their own kind.

Elvis filled the bill. He was undoubtedly the loudest, most uncouth acting, and most sexy singer on the scene. The rock 'n rollers nominated him for their idol and his election was a land slide.

Every time Presley appeared, his movements oozed

Juliet Prowse and Elvis in a love scene from G. I. Blues. She may have been Frank Sinatra's personal property but this didn't stop the hip swiveler from dating her.

June Janico, shown with Elvis on the left, was one of the first gals to ever be linked romantically with him. Some said marriage was in the offing but it never came off. Natalie Wood (right), was also one of the dolls Elvis dated.

just a little more sex, until before long he was acting more like a second rate stripper than a singer. And even though stripper play strictly to adult audiences, many of them wouldn't dare go through the gyrations and contortions Presley has employed.

A cop who caught one of his early performances in Los Angeles remarked, "If he ever did that on the street, we'd arrest him."

"I ain't being vulgar," said Presley at the time, "I'm just jumpin' with the beat, 'cause jumpin's in me. How in the pea-pickin' world kin I help if I go wild when I sing? That's the way I feel."

This could be, and this would even be alright if he confined his sexy feelings to the stage. But it seems that Elvis also felt that way when he wasn't singing because he was having a wild time smooching his teen-age bobby sox fans from one end of the country to the other.

Everytime one of his bobby six brigade puckered up and asked to be kissed, Elvis puckered up and obliged.

This uninspiring bit got started when a gal, after getting Elvis' autograph asked for a kiss, too. So Elvis kissed her. And he kissed her in a way that any self respecting parent would hope their daughter was never kissed before.

Hearing about this, femme fans everywhere began asking for like treatment. And Presley, never the bashful type, obliged.

Certainly all this adoration was because his name was Elvis Presley, but it didn't seem to bother him then.

Then there was the Charleston newspaper gal who was sent to interview the sexy shrieker. At one point in the interview Presley up and bit the babe's hand. When asked why, he said, "I was only trying to be friendly, like a puppy dog. If you want to get ahead you've got to be different."

Kissing a girl here and there and biting another is probably nothing to get excited about even if the gals were under age, but that was only the beginning.

And if mothers were upset about Presley smooching their daughters they must have become outraged when he segued into his new kick.

It started down in Lubbock, Texas where Presley had just finished an undulating show that still had most of the female teen-agers wriggling.

Making his way down the bandstand steps and

THE SEARCH FOR GERMANY'S MOST FEARED NAZI

DR. DEATH

Israeli agents are hot on a trail that grows shorter everyday. "We'll get him," they say, "We'll get him dead or alive." And they don't care which.

By SEAN O'FLYNN

A PRETTY 19-year-old girl was walking along a residential street in Buenos Aires last June 21 when a car pulled up alongside her and four men jumped out.

The girl, Graciela Narcisa Sirota, daughter of an Argentine-Jewish businessman, was on her way home from college. Before she could scream for help, the men dragged her into the car and beat her unconscious.

When she came to, she was lying naked on a table in a small furnished room. The men had torn her clothes off. Two of them held her by the arms and ankles. The others methodically burned her face, breasts and thighs with cigarettes.

As they tortured her, the men conversed in German. She caught the words "Juden" and "Eichmann."

One of the men leaned over the terrified girl with a razor-sharp knife in his hand. Slowly, with a sadistic leer, he began carving a swastika on her right breast.

As the blade bit into the quivering flesh and the crimson blood spurted, Graciela fainted again.

The men carried her back to the car, drove to the outskirts of the Argentine capital and tossed her limp form onto the electrified tracks of a commuter railway.

"This is for Adolf Eichmann," they shouted as they rode off, leaving her for dead. But Graciela was still alive. Crawling off the tracks, she narrowly escaped the lethal third rail and a train that roared past seconds later.

Nora Eldoc wasn't that lucky.

If she had lived long enough, she probably would have been sent to Buenos Aires to investigate the wave of Nazi terrorism that erupted there after Eichmann was hanged in Israel for the slaughter of 6 million Jews. Graciela Sirota was only one of the victims. Other Jews were beaten and stoned. Jewish synagogues and businesses were machine-gunned, bombed, smeared with swastikas and set ablaze.

The epidemic of anti-Semitic violence proved what Nora Eldoc told her superiors two years ago: South America, especially Argentina, Brazil and Paraguay, is still a haven for fugitive Nazi war criminals.

Nora Eldoc was an agent of the Israel Security Service.

After Eichmann was kidnapped by Israeli commandos in May, 1960, she was sent to South America to bag the No. 2 Nazi on Israel's wanted list.

She was after Dr. Josef Mengele, the notorious Doctor Death of Auschwitz murder camp.

Nora would have recognized the tortures used on Graciela Sirota — for she had gone through them all herself as an Auschwitz prisoner. A beautiful, buxom blonde, she was in the full prime of her womanhood when the Nazis arrested her and her family in Poland.

Caught in Adolf Eichmann's roundup of Polish Jews, they were shipped to the Auschwitz-Birkenau railroad terminal — dead end for the transport trains rolling from France, Belgium, Holland, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Russia and the rest of Occupied Europe.

There, Nora had her first glimpse of Doctor Death. As the new arrivals poured from the freight cars and lined up, frightened and bewildered, in front of the station platform, a "welcoming committee" of Gestapo officers appeared.

Dr. Mengele was taller than the others. He strode in front, poker-straight in his neat grey uniform. A gentle smile was on his lips and he was humming a Strauss waltz.

As he strode slowly down the lines of sick, hungry, terrified prisoners, he nodded pleasantly to the left and right. And the prisoners, thinking he was smiling at them, smiled back.

Too late, they learned the left-and-right nods were signals to the Gestapo guards. The road to the right led to the Auschwitz labor camps. The road to the left went to the extermination centers where prisoners were slaughtered with Zyklon B gas; bullets in the base of the skull; injections of poison; phosphate bombs, flame-throwers, machine guns — and medical experiments.

All children under 15, women over 45 and men over 50 were sent to the left automatically. Which of the remaining prisoners were saved depended entirely on Mengele's whims. Sometimes, he spared as much as a third of a new shipment. On other occasions, he would send an entire shipment of 10,000 or more persons to their deaths. He once ordered 1000 Jewish youths "to the left" simply because they failed to pass a height test.

When he reached Nora Eldoc's place in line, his cold brown eyes studied her blonde hair and shapely figure. Still staring, he nodded to the right. But the rest of her family went to the gas ovens.

In the years ahead, Nora wished many times that she had been sent with them.

Mengele selected her as one of his human guinea pigs. Strapping her to a table in his blood-splattered laboratory next to the crematories, he sterilized her without benefit of anesthetic. Though Nora lost her womanhood, she was one of the fortunate "patients." Others were maimed, crippled, blinded and butchered

A S WHITE HOUSE social secretary, Letitia (Tish) Baldrige is probably the world's most glamorous wallflower.

It's part of her job to sit on the sidelines and watch the parade of VIPs at the glittering balls, banquets and private parties hosted by President and Mrs. Kennedy.

She makes out the guest lists, sees that the invitations are mailed or delivered by messenger, prepares seating arrangements with an eye to rank and protocol. Tish, in short, is stage manager of the Greatest Society Show on Earth. And without her able assistance, gorgeous Jackie would have a hard time living up to her reputation as the nation's hostess with the mostest.

Off-stage in the White House wings, Tish never tires of watching Jacqueline—her longtime chum and ex-schoolmate—steal the spotlight from visiting royalty, diplomats, presidents, premiers, bejeweled dowagers and movie stars.

But every girl, in her secret heart, longs to do a bit of spotlight-stealing herself. And that's exactly what Jackie's social secretary did on a recent night off from the Presidential Palace on Pennsylvania Avenue.

Tish went to New York to attend what one Cafe Society columnist called "the social event of the year," the Sutton Theater preview of the movie "The Miracle Worker."

Now, this might seem like a busman's holiday. Or, at best, a dull affair compared to the Washington galas that Tish regularly helps produce. But if the preview wasn't really "the social event of the year," it was at least a star-studded spectacle.

The show and a huge supper party afterward drew the biggest turnout of Hollywood and Broadway celebrities since "Oscar" night. Tish hadn't seen such a galaxy of stars since her boss held open house for Frankie and his Rat Pack.

Just about everybody but Liz was there. Movie queens Joan Crawford, Joan Bennett and Lauren Bacall served as usherettes. Marilyn and Kim and Zsa Zsa showed off the latest low-cut styles. Olivia de Havilland and her sister Joan Fontaine were so thrilled they decided to kiss and make up.

Outside the theater, a crowd of 5,000 spectators gawked, cheered and whistled. As Maggi McNellis announced each new arrival, the mob roared and surged against the police barricades. Irene Dunne, Adlai Stevenson, Henry Fonda, Doris Day and all the others got a terrific hand.

But while the movie stars were the main attraction for the sidewalk audience, the stars themselves stared like pop-eyed yokels at one handsome couple in their midst—Cary Grant and tall, blonde Tish Baldrige.

Tish, the unassuming social arbiter, had just scored the biggest social coup of the season. All my herself, without a bit of help from the White House, she had won what millions of females would sell their souls for—a date with Mr. Debonair.

For this one evening, at least, Tish knew how it felt to be the center of attraction.

A RIPPLE of excitement swept through the celebrity-crowded theater as she and Cary took their seats. Heads turned, necks craned, eyes widened as the star whispered:

"Who's the girl with Cary?"

The diamond-dripping, sable-swathed dolls turned green with envy. The movie columnists turned livid with rage because they had no advance warning that Cary had his eye on the White House.

Next day, the society salons of New York, Washington and Hollywood were abuzz with romantic rumors. Park Avenue, Capitol Hill and Sunset Strip all had the same topic of conversation and the same question: Was Cary in a tizzy over Tish?

Caught off guard, the professional gossips were stunned with surprise. But they needn't have been so startled. Though Tish is neither a movie star nor a famous beauty, she is exactly the type Cary goes for like a cat to cream.

Though he has dated many brunettes and an occasional redhead, Hollywood's most durable dreamboat is a gentleman who prefers blondes. Furthermore, he likes them slim, sleek and social—not too bosomy or too voluptuous.

His three wives—actress Virginia Cherrill, who later married England's Earl of Jersey; Barbara Hutton, the much-married Woolworth heiress, and movie starlet Betsy Drake—all are trim Nordic types with Social Register backgrounds.

The dolls he dated most—Joan Fontaine, Phyllis Brooks, Grace Kelly (before she married Prince Rainier, of course), and others—followed the same pattern. Cary is more at home on Park Avenue and Long Island Sound than on Sunset Boulevard. And when choosing a female companion, he rates Class above Sex Appeal.

Now that he's shown an interest in a member of the White House "family," Washington hostesses have been deluging Cary and Tish with invitations to cocktail parties, suppers and formal balls. The ladies who rule Washington Society consider him as big a catch for these functions as the President himself.

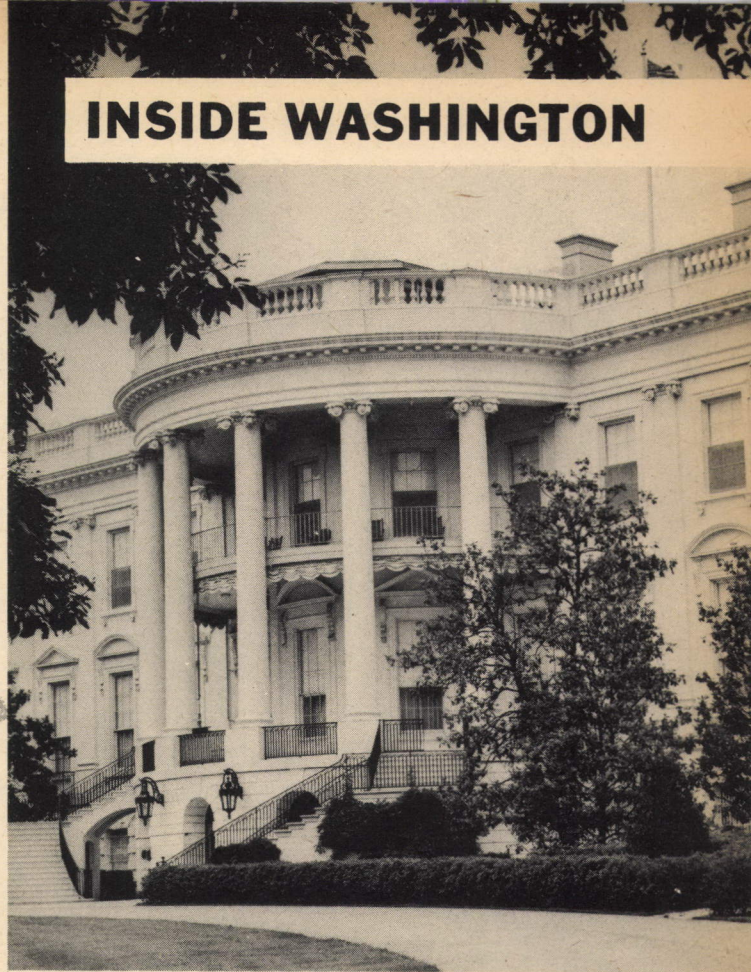

"I do hope Mr. Grant becomes a regular caller," one member of the White House domestic staff confided to a friend. "He's so much more distinguished than those other Hollywood people who are always cluttering up the place."

And a famous Capitol hostess was overheard to exclaim: "Wouldn't that gorgeous Cary Grant make a perfectly beautiful President?"

FOR all of you ladies who may feel the same way, here's a bit of bad news: Cary can never be President because he was born in England. (Real name, Archibald Leach.)

But if he starts chumming around with the Washington social set, who knows how far he might go? With his charm, sophistication and international appeal, he'd make a perfect Ambassador. Or maybe even a Secretary of State.

The State Department surely could use a global trouble-shooter with proven ability to win hearts and influence foreign females. Once the fabulous Grant charm was turned on Madame Khrushchev, say, or Madame DeGaulle, these ladies certainly would begin badgering their husbands to (Continued on page 54)

About those games that put the "con" in carnival and

"STEP RIGHT UP, FOLKS! Only a dime! Try yerr luck!"

There is something about the hoarse yell of the carny barker that strikes an irresistible chord in human nature. As Dr. Edmund Bergler, writing on the subject, says. "Every person in our culture is a potential gambler."

But though the good doctor's got the right idea, he's got the wrong terminology — because there is no such thing as a gambler; there are only operators — and suckers. And the best place to see both close up is along the carnival midway.

The so-called "front end" or "games" section of the carnival is where most of the malarky goes on. Amid the noise and glittering color, the men who run the games concessions drop out their bait. And like fish, the suckers always bite.

There are two basic types of carnival games, percentage stores and G-joints. The took the "fairness" out of those state and country fairs.

"G" stands for gaff or gimmick. Either way the place operates (and some are "two-way stores," only "slipping in the gaff" when business is slow) they have one thing in common: they can't lose. Since they can't, and somebody has to, that leaves the customer.

Take the Hoop-la, for example. The customer is given three hoops for a quarter. Inside the booth are a number of wooden blocks covered with velvet, and the idea is to ring one of them with a hoop. Prizes range from portable radios to expensive sets of china.

While a quarter seems a meager price to pay for such loot (and the impression is not accidental), considering that it is impossible to get the hoop over the block, it is approximately 25¢ too much. The gaff here is the the velvet-covered blocks are not solid, but consist of a number of wooden squares piled on top of each other. The carny gently nudges one of the middle slats out a little bit past the others — and nothing short of World War II will make that hoop settle to the bottom. When the operator

THE LOWDOWN ON* JUNE

June busted out all over but not until she asked,
“Won’t you come home, Dick Powell, won’t you come home?”

By HAROLD MONROE

ALLYSON & DICK POWELL

ON JANUARY 24th, 1961, June Allyson sued Dick Powell for divorce. The grounds were mental cruelty.

"Did he (Dick Powell) ever hit you?" asked the judge trying to get to the root of the trouble.

"Never!" snapped June. "He could never do a thing like that. It was just that he was always too busy."

(She didn't say what he was too busy for.)

On January 31, 1961, she won an interlocutory decree which, in California, means that if hubby and wife cease and desist living under the same roof for one year, they are, at the termination of said period, kaput!

The decision made June very happy. And that evening, by way of celebration, she and a date really did the town. After a whirlwind round of many of cinema city's favorite eating and watering spots the wee hours of the ayem found them at Junie's front door.

Two minutes later they were inside.

Neither was seen until the morning.

And who was the guy that June celebrated her divorce with? None other than Dick Powell, the hubby she had jettisoned that very afternoon. But the minute they set foot in the same house the ex-hubby became the ever-present hubby once again.

That was the first time Mr. and Mrs. Powell ever brought their differences to a divorce court. And considering the fact that they've been married seventeen years, it isn't a bad record. However, it is by no means the first time they have ever had marital difficulties, nor is it the first time they've ever aired them.

The public first got wind of the fact that all was not well at the house that Allyson and Powell built about seven years ago.

It was the night of the Photoplay Awards and the banquet room at the Beverly Hills Hotel was jammed to capacity with the greats, the near greats and the ingrates of Hollywood.

Some had come to receive awards, others had come just to be seen and still others were there for no other reason but to gawk.

Dick Powell was there too. And, as a Hollywood star of long and good standing, he was asked to say a few words. The one-time musical comedy favorite made the usual thank-you comments and then snapped the big room to attention with a remark no one had anticipated.

"For those of you who were worried," said he, "everything's okay again at the Dick Powells."

IT CAME out of the blue. Some of the people who were retrieving their jaws from the vicinity of their knees had no idea there was or ever had been anything wrong with the Allyson-Powell merger. Others, however, knew that Dick had a problem with his petite, five-foot-nothing, goodie-goodie blonde mate. They knew too, that Dick had been getting her out of tangles with other men for the better part of their married life. But this was the first time they had ever heard Dick even hint that the marital knot wasn't as tight as it could have been.

But then, what could he have said? He was stuck with the image of June Allyson that the Hollywood press agents had created. She was typed as "the girl next door," "cute as a button," "too nice to be naughty," all sweetness and light." Why, if he had even hinted that sweet little Junie was a man-chaser from way back, her fans—and they number in the millions—would have howled their heads off at the charge and, in the end, made him the "heavy".

Jack Lemmon, shown with the Powells on the set of A Night To Remember once gave Dick something to worry about.

But what those fans—and a lot of the hipsters in Hollywood—didn't know was that June had, long ago, pushed the sugar bowl aside and reached for the spice shelf.

It even reached the stage where she was admitting it. (Sitting at a cocktail table with a few other Hollywood beauties, she flipped a pretty finger at the little-girl frock her bosses like her to wear and declared: "I've had enough of all this. I'd like to land in the middle of a nice juicy scandal—just to prove I've graduated into a woman) but no one was believing her.

BUT just so no one would think she was a doll given to idle chatter she set out to prove there was a lot more to June than a goodie-goodie personality and a Peter Pan collar.

And the first guy she proved it with was the old swinger himself, Dean Martin. Rumor has it that he was even sober at the time.

Junie first met Dean when he and his zany ex-sidekick, Jerry Lewis, were appearing at Slapsie Maxie Rosenbloom's in Hollywood.

After the meeting, June became a regular ring-sider at the club night after night. And she finally capped the caper by going right along with Dean when he moved from Hollywood to a nightery in Las Vegas. The citizens of that so-called sin-suburb are supposedly used to anything, but their raised eyebrows, as they watched June and Dean rocket around the town, proved that the Las Vegas natives weren't as blasé as they were cracked up to be.

As one gossip columnist itemed it, "Dean Martin and June Allyson are having a ball in Vegas where they're spinning faster than the roulette wheels."

Mr. Powell did a lot of hollering about this secret romance that the tabloids made public, and the betting around Hollywood was two to one that Junie would be given her walking papers. But it never happened. Dick may have been sore but he wasn't sore enough to call the whole thing off. Just what he had to say to Junie when she returned from her Vegas adventure isn't known but whatever it was she couldn't have paid much attention to it because it wasn't long until she strayed from the reservation, without reservations, again.

Tapped to star in The McConnell Story June took one look at her handsome leading man, Alan Ladd, and was off to the races.

NOW there's no denying that when an actor and an actress are making a movie they have to spend a lot of time together. But usually when the movie is finished so is the relationship. But that was not the case where June and Alan were concerned.

And to prove that Dean Martin wasn't the only guy June would leave town for when Alan took off for New York Allyson was close behind.

During this Gotham safari a friend met Dick Powell outside Hollywood's Brown Derby.

"How's June?" politely inquired the friend.

"You mean Stupid?" Powell snapped. "I don't know how Stupid is. Ask me another."

This was all Dick said (Continued on page 64)

Cafe Society's Latest Kick: POLAROID PARTIES

snapshot soirees.

INSIDE CAFE SOCIETY

IN 1837 Daguerre invented the camera.

N 1891 Lipmann perfected color film.

In 1893 Edison came up with motion pictures.

In 1947 The Polaroid Land Corporation marketed a box that took instant pix.

Since then The Polaroid Land Camera—which today enables you to snap and develop a picture inside of ten seconds—has been put to many novel uses.

But it took the smart set—with an assist from a Hollywood star whose initials are R.C.—to pioneer what is undoubtedly the most novel use of all. One which, when the secret is out, will have hotels renting a Polaroid with every bedroom, and will make the camera a must for the kind of people who like to get their jollies and develop them too.

JUST when the first Polaroid Party was thrown is not a matter of record but what is a matter of record is the fact that one was thrown the early part of last June.

It was the wee hours of the ayem when the police in this California seaside resort received several calls from residents in the most fashionable part of town.

They all complained of a wild, boisterous party.

When the police drove up to the sprawling ranch-type house they were surprised to find the place in darkness. Every so often, however, a small flash would light up one of the windows.

Reluctant to go busting into what easily may have wound up as an invasion of privacy case, the police decided to look things over first. And, peeping into the window from which the flashes were emanating, these two policemen were probably the first non-partakers to witness a Polaroid Party.

Later, when depositions were taken at headquarters, the whole story of just what Polaroid Parties are and how they work, came out.

There are several versions. One of them goes something like this:

The requisites are one good Polaroid Camera, lots of film, a wink light and an even number of males and females. They can be husbands and wives, boy-friends and girl-friends or, for that matter, even strangers. They must, however, have on thing in common. That is, loose morals and an exhibitionist complex.

The gals, stripped to the buff, are herded into one room, where they line up from wall to wall, and the lights are doused. The men, in a similar state of undress, remain in another room—they too are in darkness. With them is the Polaroid.

The girls and the guys are numbered from one to however many there are.

When man number one enters the room where the girls are, he points the camera straight ahead. Girl number one is, at this point, in the center of the room.

He snaps the pic.

Man number two enters, and likewise until all the numbers have been exhausted. At the end of this time the pics are matched to the chicks and things become pretty quiet for a little while.

Another version is to have an uneven number of males and females. Whether the extra is a gal or a guy doesn't matter. The game progresses like the first but, as there is always one who winds up without a partner, it is his or her job to take shots in the dark of the couples who, at this point, are doing what comes naturally.

Needlessly to say, the highlights, low lights and angles of these pics could win prizes anywhere in the world.

One of the first Polaroid Parties ever thrown, however, took place back around 1955. Only two people were involved in this one. One was the aforementioned movie star with the initials R.C., the other a real pretty little pigeon.

They were holed up at the Madison Hotel in New York City and, after getting bored with the usual kind of fun and games two people can play in a hotel room, the actor, who had starred in many a Hollywood production, decided to make a few pics of his own.

So, renting a Polaroid he and the doll went back to the hotel and this time recorded the usual fun and games for posterity.

Every night they snapped close to a half-hundred pix of themselves in the most interesting poses imaginable. And, considering the fact that they did other things too, this was no mean feat.

THE camera soon had seen more of the star and his lady than the doctor who brought them into the world.

Up again, down again, click . . . Up again, down again, click . . . Up again . . . down again . . . click!

All night long the shutter banged away, the flash bulbs popped and photographs the likes of which they would positively refuse to print at the corner drug store, were peeled, still smoking from the heat, off the back of the accommodating camera.

As the ads say, "There's no end to the advantages of owning a Polaroid Land Camera. You can do things with it that are downright impossible with any other camera!"

Or: "Moments like this come only once in a lifetime—and only with a Polaroid Land Camera can you be sure of capturing them forever!"

The acrobatic actor and his co-star held out for seven sensational, thrill packed nights. And during that time he and she got almost as many kicks out of their pictures as they did out of each other..

Ever wonder why Polaroid stock is so

But if you're thinking of ever feasting your eyes on some of these sexy stills—perish the thought. Though the Polaroid ad says, "Photographs produced by a Polaroid don't fade away," we can assure them that they fade away very rapidly when flushed down a hotel room johnny—which is what happened to everyone of those passionate pics.

But though the pics were gotten rid of, the idea hung on and today Polaroid parties are popping up all over the country.

These snappy snapshot soirees are sometimes conducted in hotels, sometimes in motels, sometimes in estates rented by the month and other times in private homes.

They are handled discreetly and, after all, unless things get out of hand as they did in California, who is going to suspect that married couples or unmarried couples aren't getting together for bridge or dinner or just some social drinking.

The participants have learned to keep their mouths shut and, since everyone gets paired off with everyone else during the course of the picture taking, there is little chance that some jealous wife or hubby is going to blow the whistle.

CERTAINLY wife swapping parties are not new to this country. Way back in June of 1954 when the police of Amesbury, Mass., were investigating the murder of one Melvin Clark, a hard-working citizen of that community, they brought to light one of the most fantastic stories of "wide swapping parties" ever to hit the tabloids.

Melvin Clark, the murdered man, however, had nothing to do with the parties. As a matter of fact he never attended one. He was too busy working nights to provide a good home for his beautiful wife, Lorraine.

But while Melvin was out making bread, Lorraine was at home making hay.

A more than attractive gal, Lorraine Clark fell for a character named Arthur Jackson like a ton of bricks. Since her hubby was never around to take her to parties she appointed Arthur her official escort. And where did she want to be escorted. To the wife swapping soirees, of course.

Arthur really dug the sinful sessions, though he had to share Lorraine with other men, he didn't much care as he was getting a little extra loving on the side from the wives of the men he shared Lorraine with. It was all in the game, which consisted of men tossing their house keys into a hat. At a signal the wives pulled them out, belonging for the night to the man whose key she had drawn. It was all fair, exciting and anything but good clean fun.

"It's a moral stain on the face of New England," a prominent clergyman snapped when word of the parties got out. "We'll never be able to eradicate it. Everyone should be sent to jail."

Everyone wasn't but two people were. Lorraine Clark got life imprisonment for the murder of her husband and Arthur Jackson drew three years for adultery. And considering all the women he adulterated with, this was a pretty light sentence, indeed.

Needless to say this stopped the wife swapping parties in Amesbury, Mass.

But it didn't stop them all over the country. And it didn't stop the citizenry from thinking up the newest wrinkle, Polaroid Parties. And perhaps one of the wildest games under that heading is a little innovation called Polaroid Roulette.

In this swinging version of the game an even amount of males and females are used. But the males and females are not separated and, everyone is given a Polaroid. Naturally there isn't a stitch of clothing among the participants, and naturally, the lights are turned out.

At his point everyone starts snapping pics. Wink lights and flash bulbs expose more naked flesh than a nudist magazine. And, since the Polaroid people have added the "one, two, three buttons" the camera has become so simple to operate (Continued on page 66)

Inside Info

Here are questions received over the past few weeks at our editorial desk. INSIDE STORY will attempt to answer those questions which seem to have the most general interest for all of our readers . . .

Q—This question may seem a little late in coming but I just heard something I can't believe. A friend of mine tells me that Frank Sinatra actually became a dope addict while filming The Man With The Golden Arm. Is there any truth in this?—Alice J., Columbia, South Carolina.

A—No truth at all. Three days before the opening of The Man With The Golden Arm at New York City's Victoria Theatre, a press release was prepared for transmission over the nation's news services. It was to be the opening gun in a movie publicity campaign to plant the fact that Sinatra became a dope addict for the sake of giving a convincing performance in the movie. It was carefully planned by a prominent Hollywood publicity firm which had been hoping to land United Artists account.

Dozens of releases were prepared by expert writers. Scores of interviews were arranged with publicity minded psychiatrists and narcotic specialists. Hundreds of photographs were ready to be sent out to put over this fantastic tale. Somehow, however, word of the plan leaked out and reached Frankie through the grapevine. He blew his ever-lovin' top and killed the idea right then and there.

If your friend says he read somewhere that Frankie was a dope addict he could be right. Some of the releases did escape from the factory. But as far as Frankie ever being a snow bird is concerned the answer is no, No, NO, ten thousand times NO!—ED

Q—I read a lot of items on Princess Margaret and Peter Townsend. Most of them mention the fact that Margaret is his second wife but none ever say why he divorced his first wife. Can you tell me anything about it?—P.T., Stamford, Conn.

A—Townsend divorced his first wife, Rosemary, for committing adultery in December of 1952. She is currently married to John De Lazlo, the co-respondent in the suit. Her two sons though awarded to Peter by the court, live with her.—ED

Q—I've always been a Judy Garland fan and I know her fits of temperament have gotten her into lots of trouble in Hollywood. Recently I read where they had to discontinue shooting her latest picture The Lonely Stage which she is making in London. What I want to know is was it her fault this pic was shelved and if so, what did she do this time?—Marianne V., New York City, N.Y.

A—The picture has not been shelved but shooting has been stopped temporarily. But, we're happy to report, it was not Judy's fault. This time trouble broke out in an unexpected quarter—from the Dean of Canterbury, Dr. Hewett Johnson. Seems the company had been shooting in Canterbury Cathedral and was using 50 boys in uniforms that could be mistaken for those worn by youngsters in King's School, run by the Cathedral. The Dean's complaint was that the movie boys looked "scuffy and grubby" and damaged the prestige of the real article. So the movie shuttered but only until they tidied up the uniforms.—ED

Q—Any truth to the rumor that Eleanor Powell and Jayne Mansfield, the stars of Panic Button, are feuding?—K.V., San Antonio, Texas.

A—They are indeed. Eleanor is said to be quite disconcerted by the gallery of photographers who follow Jayne around on and off the set, obviously to see if one of her dresses is going to come apart at the seams again.—ED

Q—I read recently where this country has ceased production on the B-52. If this is true what I want to know is, how many have we built? What can you tell me about the bomber—range, armament, thrust, etc? Are we building anything in its place and, if not, won't this throw quite a few people out of work?—Charles J., Portland, Oregon.

A—The last B-52 was built the last week in June at the Wichita, Kansas plant of the Boeing Company. It was the 744th of the 52's which cost about $8,000,000 per copy. This one known as a B-52H, will fly with eight Pratt Whitney turbofan engines, each putting out 17,000 pounds of thrust. The "H" has a range of more than 12,500 miles, without refueling and has the capabilities of hitting any military target on the face of the earth. It weighs 488,000 pounds and can fly higher than 60,000 feet. It will be armed with four skybolt missiles, being built by Douglas, which it would be able to launch at a target while still 1,000 miles away from its defenses. Each skybolt can carry a thermonuclear warhead. If the Russians had an "H" they could bomb Chicago with bomb-bay-stored nuclear weapons and at the same time hit Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Washington, without leaving the Chicago area. We are making no other bomber in its place. When we were turning out 52's as fast as we could, 35,000 persons were employed directly on the bomber and more than that total worked for the 4,000 subcontractors spread over 43 of the fifty states. Boeing officials forecast a gradual reduction in employment expected to total approximately 2,000 by the end of the year.—ED

Q—I'm sure I haven't got this right but I'll ask anyway. Do you know anything about a stripper suing a nightclub because she was pinched. And I don't mean arrested?—K.M., Lincoln, Nebraska.

A—You got it part right. Here's the story. Tammi True, a Fort Worth stripper, filed suit against a Fort Worth nightclub operator charging that he turned off the spotlight during her performance, knowing customers would pinch her. Miss True asked for $150,000 in damages. "It is well recognized," the suit said, "that customers would on certain occasions, when the lights were off, inflict physical harm upon the plaintiff by pinching her upon various parts of the anatomy."—ED

Q—A friend of mine tells me that he read in a column where Burt Lancaster was involved in an accident in Italy that resulted in the death of two boys. He said he would show me the item but as yet he has not been able to find it—nor have I. How's about some details?—J.F., San Francisco, Calif.

A—There were no fatalities, J. F. in fact the two boys were hardly even shaken up. What actually happened was that two boys on a motor scooter got by a road block during the shooting of Burt Lancaster's latest movie. Burt, who was driving a car along this road, and believing it to be clear, met the two boys at a bend in the highway. His car brushed them and knocked them down. The kids had no business being on the road in the first place but this didn't make any difference to Burt who was a nervous wreck until the kids were pronounced uninjured and sent home.—ED

Q—Everytime I've seen Carol Channing perform in the past she's always tossed the diamond tiara she wears into the audience upon completion of Diamonds Are A Girl's Best Friend. The last time I saw her, however, at the Dunes Hotel in Las Vegas, the tiara remained intact at the end of her act. My husband says she was wearing real diamonds this time. I don't believe him.—Mrs. Margert J., Lansing, Mich.

A—You better believe him. That little bauble was designed by Marvin Himes and only loaned to Carol for the engagement. It's worth $50,000. And we don't know of any performer who'd be willing to throw away that much loot just for a gimmick.—ED

Q—I can't help nibbling my nails. Is there any cure for the habit?—B.K., Portland, Oregon.

A—Sure, will power. But if you're worrying about what the habit's doing to your nails, don't fret. Far from stunting the growth of your nails you're actually helping them. The rate at which fingernails grow actually reveals how well nourished you are, according to a study recently conducted by Dr. Russell L. Cecil. Incidentally, women's nails grow slightly slower than men's. But nails on the longer fingers grow faster, no matter what your sex.—ED

Q—So call me a nut for asking but are all geniuses crazy?—V.B., Atlanta, Georgia.

A—We won't call you a nut but we will answer your question as well as we can. Nine out of ten geniuses suffer from alcoholism, narcotic addiction, or mental instability. Also, most are impotent and none produce offspring of genius nature. The creation of genius, says one medical report, is undoubtedly influenced by "defective" parentage.—ED

Q—I caught this one on the fly but is there really a stripper in Paris who uses a pony in her act?—D.C., Toms River, New Jersey.

A—The gal bills herself as Daniela La Horse and, as a few pictures are worth thousands of words, see for yourself, below.—ED

INSIDE CAFE SOCIETY

WHAT BABS HUTTON AND DORIS DUKE LEARNED FROM THEIR MUSIC TEACHERS

by CARL DURAND

Believe it or not, the two richest chicks in the world are on a music kick. Maybe they've learned that hobbies are cheaper than hubbies.

IN CASE Porfirio Rubirosa, retired Dominican diplomat and playboy champ, is wondering whatever happened to his second and third wives, here's the answer:

They're taking music lessons.

Doris Duke is learning to play piano.

And Barbara Hutton is learning to strum a guitar.

This information may surprise you, Rubi, because YOU know Doris has been an accomplished pianist for years—so good she once tickled the ivories in a Paris bistro. You also know Babs isn't exactly the beatnik or hillbilly type usually associated with guitar-plunking.

But every girl has to have a hobby. And though Doris and Babs aren't as young as they used to be, they're still young enough to want to learn. Especially when their teachers are handsome young men.

Doris' new instructor is society pianist Arthur Simmons.

Barbara's minstrel boy is Lloyd Franklin.

When Doris visits her estates in New Jersey, California, Hawaii and France, she takes Arthur along to make sure her keyboard doesn't gather any dust.

And when Barbara goes gadding about Europe and the East—Near, Far and Middle—Lloyd strings along with his trusty guitar. He also plays polo, tennis and golf.

Between them, Doris and Babs are worth roughly $500 million. Doris, who inherited a $300 million tobacco fortune and added several millions to it through investments, is the richest woman in the world.

Though she is out in front of Barbara financially by $100 million or so, she is far behind in the matrimonial sweepstakes. Doris has had only two husbands —society playboy H. R. "Jimmy" Cromwell, who sought $7 million alimony, but settled for $1 million cash, and the aforementioned Porfirio.

Barbara, of the Woolworth dime-store millions, has been married six times.

BESIDES Rubi, the Playboy Prince, her mates have included a Russian Prince, a Danish Count, a German Baron, and movie king Cary Grant.

Her last husband was Baron Gottfried von Cramm, a champion tennis player and convicted homosexual.
Though "Gottsie" preferred boys, Babs once said she had "loved him for 17 years."

Married in 1955, they separated in 1957 and were quietly divorced last year without a whisper of publicity.

"We had been friends for such a long time that we decided it would be right for us to marry," Gottsie said recently. "Well, we did marry and it was a terrible mish-mash. We could not coincide our ideas.

"The tragedy is that the marriage ended our friendship. All those years we were friends. Now we don't even see one another."

According to mutual acquaintances, Barbara tried to persuade Gottsie to consult a psychiatrist about his lavender love life. But the Baron was perfectly happy with his gay existence and queer outlook. Besides, he felt he was too old to switch to females.

"If you want to marry me," he told Babs in effect,
"You'll have to take me the way I am."

Certainly she had no illusions about the ball-chasing tennis star. But after such handsome and debonair hubbies as Rubi, Cary Grant and Count Haugwitz von Reventlow, she wanted a mate who would be impervious to the enticements of other women.

She certainly remembered how Zsa Zsa Gabor stole Rubi from her on their honeymoon and broke up her brief but costly marriage to the dusky Dominican. Or how matinee idol Grant was mobbed by his female fans whenever they went out in public.

Certainly Babs wouldn't have to worry about Gottsie taking off after another woman.

For a while, the Baron and Baronees lived blissfully in his castle on the Rhine and her palaces in Tangier, Switzerland and the French Riviera. Then their mutual hobby—collecting attractive young men —interfered with both the marriage and their 20-year friendship.

When Babs netted an exciting specimen, she didn't dare bring it home to show it off to Gottsie. Von Cramm, in turn, was equally careful not to display his butterfly boys where Barbara could get at them.

So he stayed in Germany while she went traipsing off around the world with a parade of tall, tweedy travelling companions.

ONE of the first of these global escorts was Philip Van Rennselaer, a good-looking youth who was born around the time Barbara was taking her first trip to the altar. A member of one of America's oldest and most socially prominent families, Philip toured the Continent, the Orient and North Africa with bubbly Babs.

When they returned to New York, he informed his Cafe Society pals that he and Barbara planned to marry.

But when society columnists asked her about this

especially if the guy playing it is named Arthur Simmons.

rumor, Babs said she already had a perfectly good husband in Germany and had no intention of trading him in on a new model.

Philip's last trip with the Woolworth heiress was a flight to Acapulco. But it was a foursome, not a twosome. Without consulting Phil, Barbara had invited two other young men along—Jimmy Douglas, son of the former Air Force Secretary, and a lad named Roderick Coop.

A few weeks later, Philip returned to New York alone. And Jimmy and Rod joined Babs on a trip around the world—an arrangement that must have made her limp-wrist spouse turn green with envy.

PERHAPS because he had musical talent, Jimmy became the new young man in busy Barbara's life. Coop eventually came back to the States, leaving Jim and Babs to continue their journeys without him. For a while, they settled down in her fortress-like mansion in the Casbah of Tangier, where she composed poetry and he accompanied her verses on the piano.

It was all so refined and romantic.

"Barbara has led a very unusual and extraordinary life," said Jimmy at the time, with gentlemanly understatement, "a life in which she has experienced a great deal of sorrow and has been ill for some time. But now I think she is better than she has ever been before."

"She sometimes reads poetry to me, and I play the piano for her, mostly Chopin."

They had a cozy little idyl while it lasted, but Babs soon tired of their poetry-and-piano duets. Seeking new inspiration for her verses, she switched from piano to guitar.

Jimmy, the high-flying Air Secretary's son, was replaced by guitar-strumming Lloyd Franklin, a lean lanky former British Guardsman. At 24, Lloyd is younger than Barbara's son, Lance Reventlow. And he's 25 years the junior of soon-to-be-50 Babs.

But if he plays his guitar right, who knows? He might hit the million-dollar jackpot on the dime machine.

At the mid-century mark, Doris Duke also is working hard at her music lessons and her collection of upstanding young fellows.

As we mentioned before, youthful Arthur Simmons is her latest piano tutor.

He succeeded Joe Castro, a baby-faced, wavy-haired jazzman who accompanied the world's richest music student on a baby grand tour of Europe a few years ago.

ON THE FLIGHT over, Doris traveled under the name of Dolly Strayhorn. Castro's jive combo found work in a third-rate Paris nitery and Doris regularly sat in on the piano, wearing a black wig and dark glasses. She was known to the cool, cool customers simply as "Katherine" or "Castro's friend."

In Geneva, Switzerland, a photographer spotted Doris boarding a plane for Rome with Castro and a saxophone player in his band. When the lensman tried to snap a picture of the incognito heiress, one of her escorts hurled a full bottle of cognac at him.

Doris and Joey made beautiful music together all over the Continent before she got bored with being his kitten on the keys.

Besides her interest in music and musicians, Doris has been an ardent student of such varied subjects as art, ballet, hypnotism and yoga.

A few years ago, she installed an Indian fakir in her Hollywood mansion, a hilltop hideaway called Falcon's Lair by its original owner, Rudolph Valentino. This fakir apparently was no faker, for he taught Doris the inside tricks of yoga, cured her sinus condition and relaxed her nerves so thoroughly that she was able to sleep without tranquilizing pills for the first time in years.

WHEN he finally left her employ, she handed him a typical DD going-away present—three blank checks, containing only her signature. Nobody but Doris, the yoga and her bankers know if he ever cashed them—or, if he did, what amounts he wrote in.

Of course, no one knows either, just what sort of a balance Doris maintained in the particular account on which the checks were drawn. But, considering the kind of money this chick keeps around, it could easily have turned out to be a handsome gift indeed. Two-month marriage were a few little wedding pres-

A blank check from Doris was something none of her husbands or lovers ever received. But her first spouse got a tidy $1 million settlement. And Rubi, her second, received a modest "pin money" allowance of $25,000 a year from their 1948 divorce until he married Babs Hutton.

Rubi boasts that he "never took a cent" from Babs, never even tried for alimony. All he got out of their or, if he did, what amounts he wrote in. ents—an airplane, a string of polo ponies and other trinkets worth an estimated $2 million.

And he didn't even have to play piano or guitar.

Barbara Hutton digs guitar. Here she's shown about to sail on the SS France with string strummer, Lloyd Franklin.

She never really got to know her mother or her father but the consensus of opinion in Hollywood is that they were never married.

THE ACTRESS WHO WENT TO THE DOGS

By TONY BERNARD

MANY OF THE BIGGEST STARS in Hollywood come from broken homes. But this actress never had a real home. She never knew her father and the consensus of opinion is that her mother hardly knew him either. They were never married.

At a very early age she was taken from her mother and went to live with people she neither knew nor liked. She couldn't get alone with them—but she was committed and had to stay.

Her Great Love

Early in life she showed a flair for dramatics. And it was thru this talent that she found the man she'd been waiting for all her young life. He coached her, worked with her, and though she had trouble with the language in the very beginning she quickly caught on. Her coach was gentle and kind and in no time at all she was head over heels in love with him. So much so that she was willing to support him for the rest of her life.

When he felt she was ready to crack the big-time, she started making the rounds. Casting directors admired her fine form draped languidly on their couches. These men patted and fondled her, but it was the same old story for quite some time.

"You're not quite the type we were looking for—we want them bigger."

"Well built, but her hair is too long for the part."

"Good looking, nice legs and chest, but we were looking for someone smaller."

Then suddenly, out of the blue, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer gave her her start. It wasn't the biggest part in the world, and she did not get the leading man in the end, but it was a start. She took direction well and before long was in demand all over Hollywood. Things went along quite well for a while.

But once again bad luck dogged her footsteps. The man to whom she had pledged her love had her sewed up lock, stock, and barrel. She never saw a dime of the money she made.

Too Beautiful

He gave her a nice home, fed her and took care of her, yet not one red cent did she ever get to spend herself.

But she didn't mind. She was in love with him.

Since her debut she's appeared in many pictures. She's also had her own show on television, but producers have yet to find a leading man worthy of her.

She's so beautiful no male partner can be trusted on screen with her. Because anything could happen and probably would if another dog got within three feet of leading lady Lassie while making a picture. ■ ■

They Got The Breaks— Now They're Breaking Hollywood

By BRAD ECKHARDT

Liz Taylor and Richard Burton's romance added millions to Cleopatra costs. Marlon Brando's temperament made Mutiny On The Bounty second most costly film in history. Marilyn's contrariness caused 20th Century to blow $2,000,000.

How those big named brats of Hollywood make crazy demands on their studios and wind up spending millions of dollars with no sense!

DURING the past few months it has become increasingly evident to anyone capable of reading the newspapers that many of Hollywood's biggest and highest paid stars are getting much too big for their britches. With mounting amazement the public has learned:

1. That Elizabeth Taylor's recurring illnesses, willful absenteeism and hectic private love-life are responsible for much of the $32 million spent to date on "Cleopatra," making it the costliest spectacular in film history;

2. That Marlon Brando's temperamental tantrums have cost MGM at least $6 million — and turned "Mutiny on the Bounty," at an estimated cost of about $27 million, into the second most expensive opus in film history;

3. That Marilyn Monroe has been goofing off on the job so consistently that her studio finally had to fire her and shelve the production of "Something's Got to Give," taking a licking to the tune of about $2 million.

Taylor, Brando and Monroe of course are top names in the movie business. For one day's labor before the cameras, Liz gets $10,000—almost twice as much as the average working stiff in this country earns every year. Marlon demands and gets more than a million bucks per picture—about ten times the annual take-home pay of the President of the U.S. And Marilyn's paycheck is equally astronomical.

Now you'd think that for this kind of dough they would buckle down and turn in an honest day's work. So what happened?

During the seven weeks of shooting on "Something's Got to Give," Marilyn Monroe showed up for work exactly five days. And when she did manage to get to the set she was invariably late, tying up the entire cast and a high-priced camera crew.

"If we had continued at the rate we were going with Marilyn," a spokesman for 20th Century-Fox explained, "we would have had another 'Cleopatra'. It's better to shut down and lose $2 million than keep on and maybe lose $10 million or $12 million."

This is by no means the first time Marilyn has had trouble with her studio. Objecting to the roles assigned her, she has refused several times to fulfill her contract and took a suspension—once for more than a year. She finally had to be mollified by an under-the-table payment of $450,000 to keep her happy.

GETTING to the studio late, or not at all, has become a habit with her. After directing Monroe in "River of No Return," Otto Preminger swore he'd never do another film with her. "She was always 45 minutes to two hours late." Billy Wilder, who directed her in "Seven Year Itch" and "Some Like It Hot," said that extracting a performance from her was like "pulling teeth." He explained:

"She has breasts like granite, and a brain like Swiss cheese . . . full of holes. She defies gravity. She hasn't the vaguest conception of the time of day. She arrives late and tells you she couldn't find the studio, though she's been working there for years."

On the set she acts like a prima donna. In "Bus Stop," for instance, she objected to Hope Lange's blonde hair because it conflicted with hers. When director Joshua Logan refused to have Miss Lange's hair darkened, Marilyn walked off the set and tied up the whole production until the director gave in to her demands.

As a rule she is heartily disliked by other actors. After making "Some Like It Hot," Tony Curtis refused to work with her again. "She is a most unpleasant dame to get along with," he said. "She's suspicious of other actors, constantly tries to stir up trouble between them."

And how was it making love to Marilyn?

"It was like kissing Hitler!" Tony snapped.

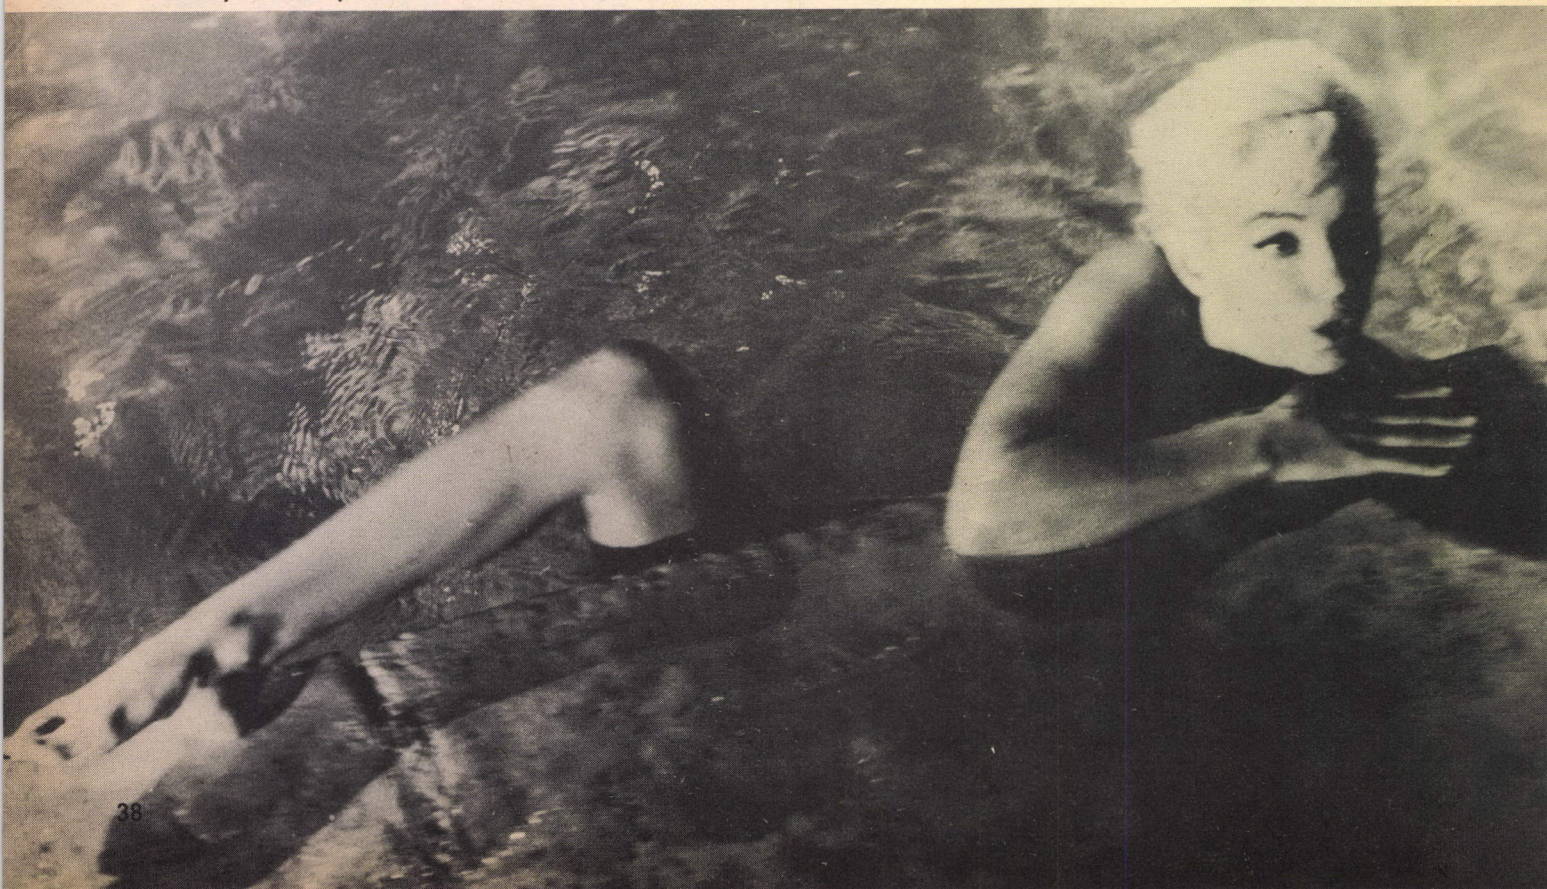

When it comes to behaving like a spoiled brat—on and off the stage—Liz Taylor can give Monroe cards and spades and still win handily. Whenever she is bored, or her work interferes with her love-life, she simply doesn't show up on the set.

Several times during the latter part of the filming of "Cleopatra" she failed to appear for a day's scheduled work, preferring to dally on the beach with her co-star and new boyfriend, Richard Burton. Each time hundreds of extras were given a holiday with full pay—at the studio's expense.

AFTER pouring enough money into the production to dam the Nile, and winding up with seven hours of unedited film, studio executives heaved a sigh of relief and proclaimed the picture finished. But Liz demurred. She insisted that several more scenes be shot on the Isle of Ischia—which would put her back on the payroll for three more weeks at $10,000 per day, and added a minimum of $400,000 to the already excessive cost of the opus.

Fearing that the three weeks work might cost another $3 million instead of a mere $400,000, studio executives insisted on calling it a day. Whereupon Liz, backed by producer Walter Wanger, threatened to sue 20th Century-Fox. At this writing the battle of words via cable and long-distance telephone continues. Meanwhile Liz and Burton are living it up together at Ischia.

Marilyn's nude pool scene for Something's Got To Give was a gasser but Monroe goofed and flick was scrapped.

Because of Brando's temperament Mutiny On The Bounty cost studio more than Ben Hur and Gone With The Wind combined.

Marlon Brando admittedly is a fine actor and big boxoffice attraction. He also is a born trouble-maker who insists on running the whole show in any film he condescends to make and an old pro at forcing his Hollywood bosses to kowtow to his whims, thereby appreciably upping budget costs.

He refused to sign for "Sayonara" until the ending of the script had been changed "to get a message about tolerance across" — by having the American hero wed the Japanese heroine. Similarly in mid-production he suddenly decided that he didn't like the ending of "The Young Lions," refused to finish the film unless and until he could rewrite it. In addition to starring in "One-Eyed Jacks" he directed it, and supervised the writing on the script as well. Although he spent money lavishly on this one-man show, it was a flop.

HOWEVER by all accounts his overwhelming ego, petulance and insufferable conceit has broken all records in filming "Mutiny on the Bounty," turning it into a producer's nightmare which to date has cost MGM more than it spent on "Ben Hur" and "Gone With the Wind" combined.

According to the film's director, veteran Lewis Milestone, "Brando's recalcitrance, pettishness, argumentativeness and sulking has cost the production at least $6 million in additional cost and months of extra work." Among his charges:

1. "Whenever I tried to direct Brando in a scene he'd say: 'Are you telling me, or asking my advice?'" Later he put plugs in his ears so he couldn't hear the director, or other actors. Finally he quit talking to the director, took to arguing with the producer.

"It wasn't a movie production, it was a debating society. Brando would discuss for four hours, then we'd shoot for an hour to get in a two-minute scene. By now he was directing himself and ignoring everybody else. It was as if we were making two different pictures."

2. He kept insisting on changes in the script. After six different writers had tried their hand at it he was still dissatisfied, insisted on rewriting the ending himself "to get across a message." The ending he wrote was awful, the producer rejected it and eventually they went back to the last version.

3. "To find his leading lady, Brando took each of 16 pre-chosen Polynesian maidens into a room with him, one at a time, and threatened to throw himself out of the window in order to study their reactions. Since all responded with giggles, this procedure was unsuccessful. He eventually chose as his co-star a girl named Tarita, who was employed as a dishwasher and waitress at the local hotel."

4. He spent all of his evenings in Tahiti in local night-spots, playing the native drums and dancing barefoot with Polynesian cuties. Next morning he would arrive on the set bleary-eyed and unprepared for the day's shooting. He rarely knew his lines, would fumble through as many as 30 takes of a single scene.

5. "Three weeks before we were to leave Tahiti he decided to move from the house we had rented for him to an abandoned villa nearly 50 kilometers (about 30 miles) away. It cost us more than $6,000 to make it habitable for him."

6. Brando's contract called (Continued on page 70)

Because of those off screen antics of Liz Taylor and Dick Burton, Cleopatra will probably never return investors' dough.

Gloria Eves shown as she appeared for work the day after she claimed Bo Belinsky had beaten her up.

BO BELINSKY: BASEBALL'S KOOKIEST CURVE BALLER

ACCORDING to the sports writers on the baseball beat all lefthanders are eccentric.

This is, supposedly, especially true of pitchers.

And though there have been many southpaws who were as down to earth as bankers the ones who were characters stood out on the diamond like the cherry atop a banana split.

Lefty Gomez was one of those. Up until now he's been known as the goofiest of them all.

We say "up until now" because this year a new lefthander exploded upon the scene. His name's Robert (Bobo) Belinsky, and though this is only his first season in major league baseball he's already being compared to Gomez.

If he stays around, and he should, considering the way he's throwing right now, there are those who say he'll wind up as the kookiest of them all.

MR. BELINSKY, for those uninitiated who don't read the sports pages, the gossip columnists or the TV writers, is a pitcher for the Los Angeles Angels. At this writing he has a record of seven wins and three losses, he's third in the league in earned run average (2.79) and, in the early part of May, against the Baltimore Orioles, he pitched the American League's first no-hitter in four seasons.

A mighty impressive record for a rookie. But it comes as no surprise to Bo. Ask him and he'll tell you he's the best pitcher in baseball. He really isn't—yet—but he is the kookiest rookie to hit the big leagues since Ring Lardners marvelous character, Jack Keefe.

An itinerate minor leaguer with a blazing fast ball, a reputation for wildness and a record of nine wins and ten losses at Little Rock, pitcher Belinsky was called up to the Angels' training camp this spring.

Now for most guys a tryout with a major league ball club would be the realization of an ambition. But not for Bo. Not only did he not give a damn whether he made the club or not, he even reported to camp nine days late. When asked where he'd been he explained that he was delayed because he was playing in a pool tournament in Trenton, N. J. (his home town) and couldn't break away.

AND he wasn't in camp ten minutes when he called a press conference to complain about the $6,000 minimum salary contract the Angels had given him.

"Hell," said he. "I know I'm a rookie, I even got my hair cut so I'd look like one. But baseball is like pool. If you're playing for five cents a point, you do nothing. When it gets up to five or ten bucks, then you turn it on."

All general manager Fred Haney had to say when he was told of Bo's speech was, "Belinsky is a bug! He can take our offer or go shoot pool."

Belinsky took the offer and Fred Haney was forced to eat his words early in May when Bo was wheeling along with a record of five wins and no defeats and a no-hitter under his belt.

On June 15, he got a raise to $7,000.

A real swinger, Bo is the son of a Trenton laborer. He never played high school ball because, as he put it, "You had to be a hot dog to play on our team at Trenton. I couldn't go for that 'yes sir and no sir' bit or all that win for the old red-and-black, siss boom bah!"

After working two years in an overall factory and another year shoveling out freight cars for a pottery firm, Bo grabbed a pitching job with the Class D, Brunswick, Ga. Pirates, a Pittsburgh farm club. He was paid $185 per month. "A ridiculously low price," he says, "but I was looking for some place in the sun. Someplace I could get a tan. I figured I'd go down there and see what it was like. It was awful—a lousy little hotel room with rubber pancakes for breakfast. So, one day I went to the manager and said, 'Look, you're from Pennsylvania. I'm from Jersey. Let's not kid ourselves—Georgia's a different country. I want out.'"

He got a transfer.

But only as far as Dublin, Ga.

Says Bo, "I went home!"

CORINNE CALVET

Hi-jinks on the High Seas

By MARTIN WAINWRIGHT

PERCHED on the rail of the liner Queen Mary, Corinne Calvet crossed her lovely legs and issued her Declaration of Independence.

Fed up with marriage, she said she planned to devote her private life to the part she had portrayed so often in the movies—the scarlet role of the Other Woman.

"I've been a wife twice," she said, "and all the joys seem to be for the Other Woman. So that's for me."

Then she offered this free advice to females:

"American men make wonderful husbands if you don't love them. But if you love them, don't marry them. I don't mean they are lousy lovers. I just think they are little boys who don't know what they want. In America, you don't have romances — you have affairs."

Then, having kissed off American manhood, Corinne kissed the country goodbye. But not for long.

The French bon-bon's farewell to the press corps took place in April, 1960, as she set out for Europe.

Two years later, at a somewhat similar sailing, her words came back to haunt her. The date was June 20, 1962. Corinne was departing for Europe again, aboard the Queen Elizabeth. Only this time she didn't summon photographers and reporters to a cheese-cake-and-confession conference.

This time, the newsmen had to hunt for her.

Corinne and her new romance, millionaire stockbroker Donald Scott, had sneaked aboard before the other passengers arrived. Their names weren't on the luxury liner's regular passenger list. Corinne's half of their double suite was reserved in the name of her-pretty, 20-year-old maid, Suzanne Pepitone.

But newshounds have a way of sniffing out such secret arrangements, and soon they were hot on Corinne's perfumed trail. They found her in Scott's half of the HIS and HERS cabins.

As gorgeous as ever, CC wore a red knit dress that clung to every sharp curve. A black beret crowned her auburn hair.

CURLING up catlike on one of the cabin's twin beds, she confided she was going to Paris, her old home town, "partly for business, partly for pleasure."

Asked which heading Scott came under—business or pleasure—Corinne smiled her most seductive smile and replied: "We're just good friends."

"We met when we were unhappy," she added, "when we had both been physically abandoned by our mates. We were two miserable people and we became great friends."

Then she hinted the voyage might end in marriage—not to Scott, but to her second husband, Jeff Stone. A reconciliation, she claimed, was "in the works."

But not even Corinne could explain why she took her current heartthrob along in an adjoining cabin if she was really serious about patching up her broken marriage to Stone. Sympathetic though they were, the newsmen were also understandingly skeptical.

And so was Don's wife, shapely Roslyn Kern Scott.

"I feel very bitter about her," Roslyn said. "She is directly responsible for what happened to our

Max Schell Wasn't Schnell Enough For Nancy Kwan!

Hot from a fortune cookie—the INSIDE STORY that shocked Hollywood.

By JAMES ROBERTSON

THE WORLD OF "Suzie Wong" came crashing down recently when Hollywood's yummiest Yum-Yum girl fell in and out of love.

All Nancy Kwan did was get married.

But that was enough to give her bosses ulcers, make monkeys out of her press agents, anger the gossip peddlers and surprise the HELL out of Maximilian Sc-----.

"Why is everybody so excited?" the Eurasian beauty inquired as shock waves set off by her London marriage rolled around the world to Hollywood and Hong Kong.

"Everybody said I would marry an Austrian," she added. "Even a fortune teller told me this. I just did what people expected me to do. So what's all the fuss about?"

Nancy had a point there. For months, the professional stargazers had been predicting she would soon be the bride of Oscar-winning Maxi Schell.

The Show Biz columnists said it. The movie magazines said it. Nancy's studio publicists hinted it. Neither she nor Max denied it. And one fan magazine was going to press with a picture of Nancy and Max on the cover when the long-awaited wedding suddenly chimed loud and clear.

Only the Austrian she promised to love, honor and obey wasn't Vienna-born Max!

The man she married was Innsbruck innkeeper Peter Pock, a surprise entry in the Suzie Wong Sweepstakes.

If she had suddenly eloped with Frank Sinatra, the movie world could hardly have been more stunned. Not only was Pock an "outsider," completely unknown to Hollywood royalty, he also seemed incredibly young to have walked off with screenland's hottest piece of property.

He is only 22, a year younger than Nancy.

They met while she was in Austria making "The Main Attraction," her latest movie. As soon as he gazed at her lotus-petal skin and luscious figure, Peter knew she was the Main Attraction for him.

A few weeks later, Nancy and the movie company moved to London. Peter followed, in pursuit of the Six Happinesses — old Chinese term embracing all sorts of delights.

She finished work on the film last June 6. The following day, she and Pock appeared at the Paddington registrar's office in northwest London, where they were spliced in a 15-minute civil ceremony.

Then the happy couple took off for Austria, so Nancy could meet his family, and Hong Kong, so he could meet hers.

If nothing else, the marriage proved Kipling was wrong when he said "East is East and West is West and never the twain shall meet."

It also proved that it's true what they say about Chinese girls — they're just as unpredictable as the others.

So what happened to Maxi and his much-publicized courtship?

The INSIDE STORY — hot from inside a fortune cookie — is that Schell wasn't Schnell enough.

When he should have run, he walked; when he should have walked, he sat down. Max had the inside track to Nancy's heart, but he balked on the home stretch to the altar.

Old Chinese proverb say: You can't have your fortune cookie and eat it too.

Max thought he could. But a China doll like Nancy can't be placed on shelf and left there like Schell's gold-plated Oscar. This real, live doll wanted a real, live husband — not just an admirer.

Until Peter Pock picked his pretty passion poppy, Maxi had Nancy pretty much to himself. For months, they were inseparable. They toured the New-York-Las Vegas-Hollywood circuit together, held hands in romantic bistros, went for moonlight rides in her white Jaguar sports car and moonlight dips in her swimming pool.

But Max didn't pop the big question. And Nancy couldn't ask him to marry her. After all, she was brought up in the Orient where females must wait for the menfolk to make up their minds — and then must dutifully obey.

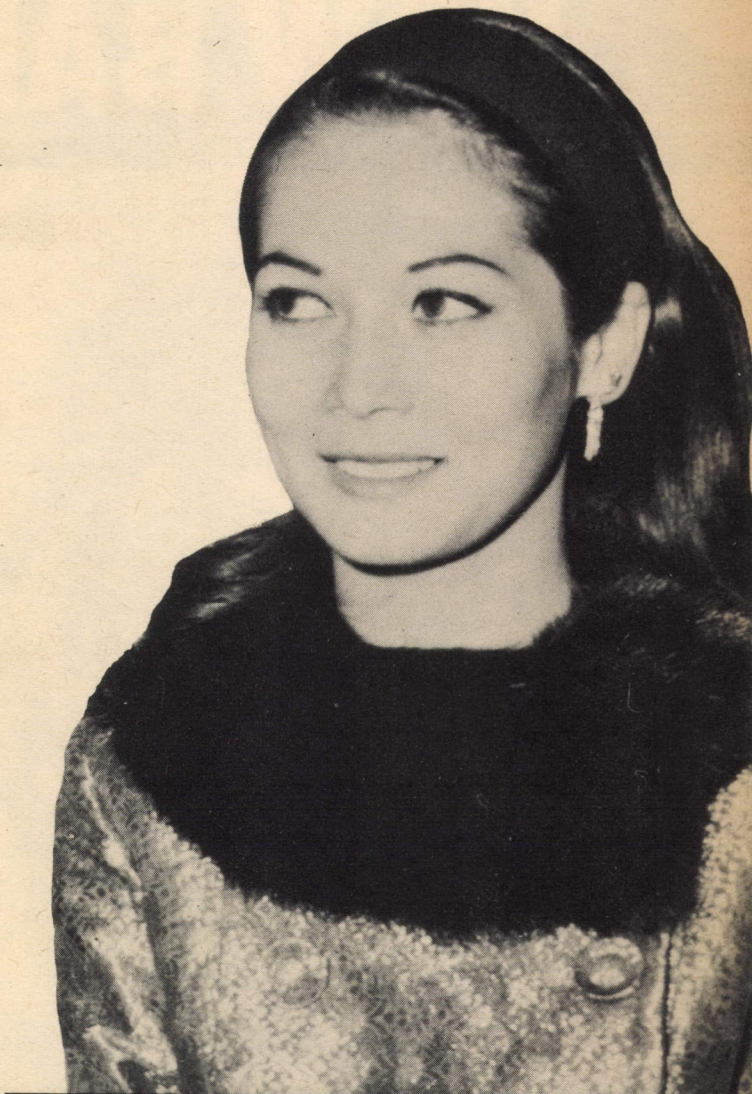

About all she could do was drop discreet hints in the newspaper columns, hoping Maxi would read them.

"In China everybody believes in fortune tellers," she said on one occasion. "I believe in them. They are usually right. In Hong Kong, a fortune teller told me I would become an actress, would visit London and Hollywood — and would marry when I am 22."

She was 22 when she made this statement. And Max was her only boy friend at the time. But he was in no hurry to make the fortune teller's prediction come true.

On another occasion, she said: "If she is mature and very much in love, a girl should get married right then, regardless of age. The trouble is many young Americans marry to get away from home or because they want to make love.

"That is not enough. Marriage should be more than sex. You have to be able to talk to your husband.

You can't just sit around and stare at walls between love-making."

Nancy and Max did plenty of talking. But he never got around to the topic that was uppermost on her mind.

As if to assure him that he wouldn't have to worry about which movie star wore the pants, she told an interviewer: "If I marry somebody who is an actor, I stop acting."

Though these obvious remarks would have hit some lovers with the force of a bazooka shell, they flew right over Maxi's handsome head.

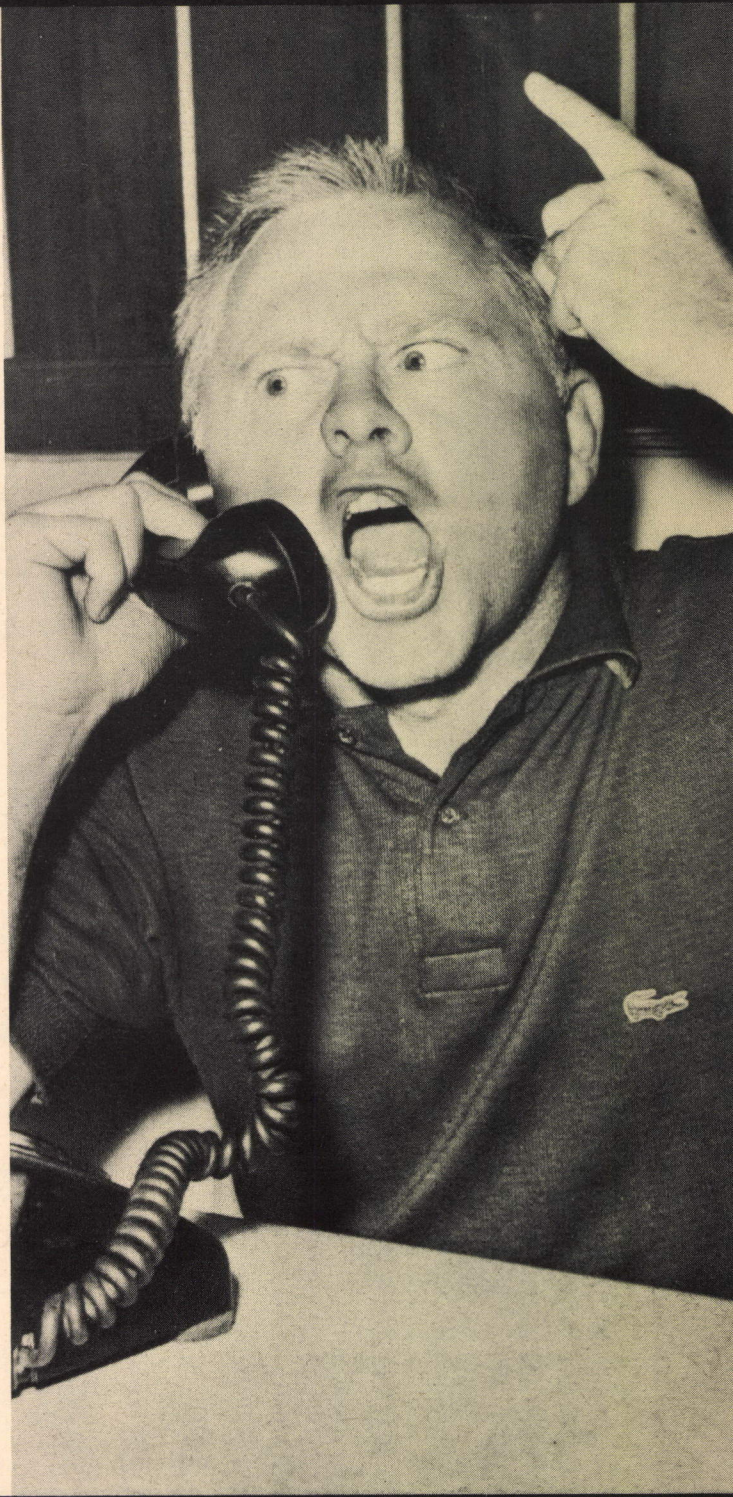

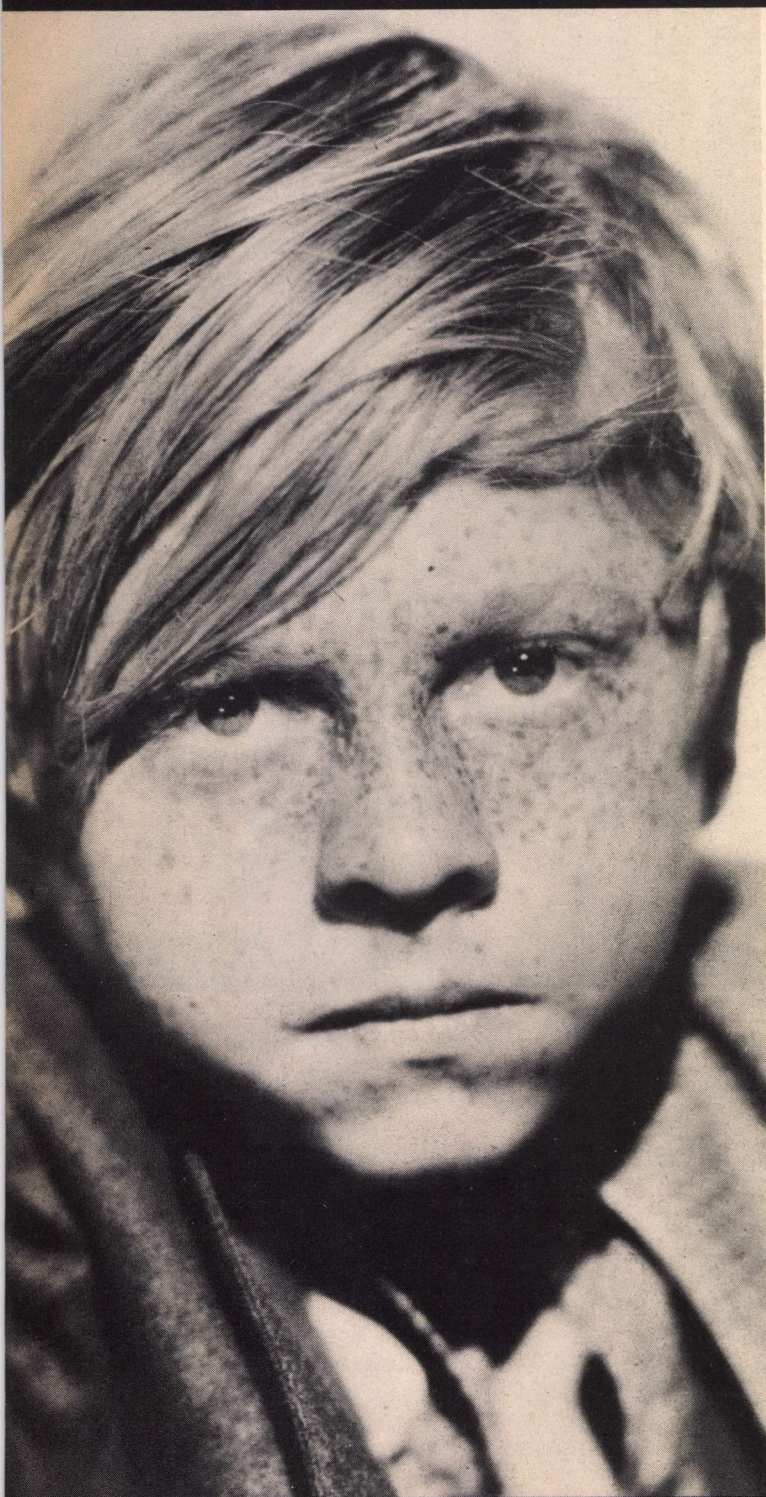

"Other people keep hearing the music of wedding bells," one of his pals observed. "But Max is tone deaf."

He parried all questions about his romance with an enigmatic smile and vague statements of affection for Nancy. Following his lead, Nancy answered the queries with the coy comment: Max? Who's Max?

HOW BANKRUPTCY

Just to prove that even a very little guy CAN'T

FOUND ANDY HARDY

By CHUCK JAMIESON

THE YEARS have not dealt kindly with Andy Hardy, America's favorite muddle-headed adolescent of the late 1930s and early 1940s. Today at the ripe old age of 42, after gambling through five marriages, four divorces, three children and several million bucks, he's flat broke. In fact he's busted, bankrupt.

In a petition of involuntary bankruptcy filed in Federal Court at Los Angeles last June, pint-size, gravel-voiced Mickey Rooney listed debts of $484,914 and assets of just $500—mostly household goods and old clothes.

Among his principal creditors he cited the U.S. Internal Revenue Bureau, with a claim totaling $106,686; the State of California, which also wants a big hunk of lettuce for back taxes; and three of his pretty ex-wives, who have been clamoring for back alimony and child support.

How muddle-headed can a little guy get?

The INSIDE STORY is, a lot of people in Hollywood chortling merrily over Handy Andy's money troubles. For although he has been a big-time performer almost from the time he first began to talk, and his versatile talent for show-business is widely admired, his inflated ego, cocksure brashness, loud-mouthed bragging and belligerence—and above all his wantin' ways with women—have brought the Wonderkind of Wonderland more enemies than friends.

As a matter of fact these same characteristics, plus a compulsion for long-legged lovelies, are reputed to be largely responsible for his current financial plight.

Born Jo Yule Jr. in Brooklyn in 1920, from the age of two months he was brought up back-stage in the theatre. His pater, Joe Yule Sr., was an old-time burlesque comedian; his mother, Neil Carter, an eccentric dancer. They played in vaudeville together.

Junior made his stage debut at the tender age of 3. One night during the vaudeville act of the veteran comedian Sid Gold, the take goes, the tiny tot toddled out on the stage, stood on his head, sang "Pal of My Cradle Days" and stole the show.

His proud parents promptly incorporated him into their act. Wearing a tiny tuxedo and smoking a big rubber stogie, he impersonated a midget. And that's how he got his first job in the movies a year later, at the age of 4—impersonating a midget in the film "Not To Be Trusted".

However it was the "Andy Hardy" series that rocketed Rooney to stardom, made him Hollywood's hottest box-office attraction in 1938, 1939 and 1940—along with such film greats as Clark Gable and Wallace Beery—and poured a gross of over $30 million into MGM's coffers.

A precocious 20 when he completed eight Hardy pictures and was earning $1,000 per week, success spoiled Andy. He got a swelled head, and other parts of his anatomy were singularly affected.

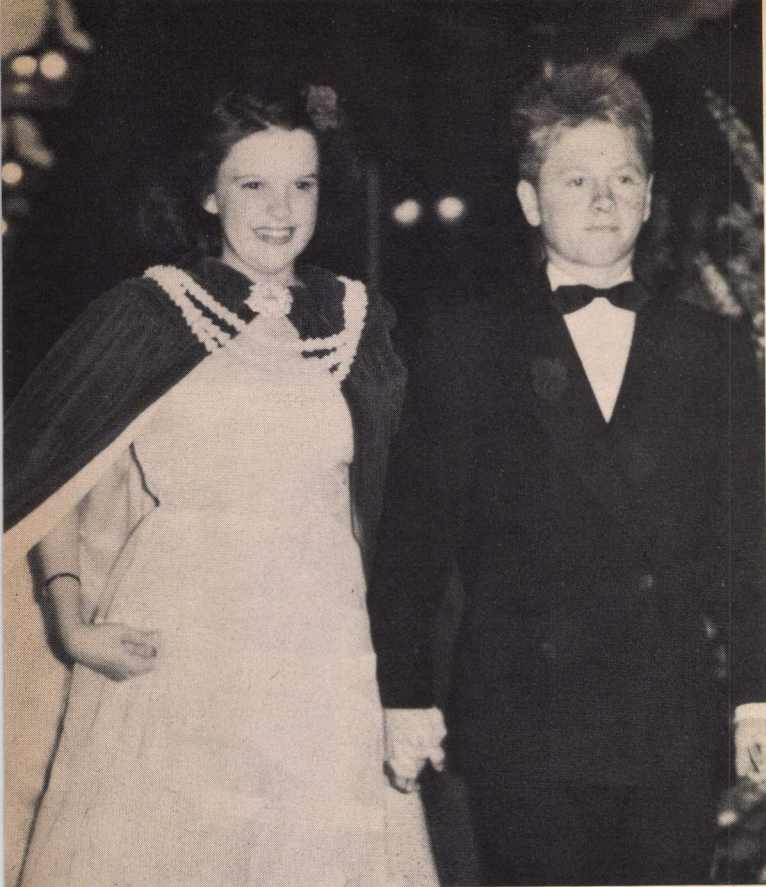

While MGM was going all-out to project him in the image of the all-American boy before the movie-going public, Mickey was privately projecting himself in the image of the all-American wolf offstage. Never the shy silent type, his lengthy monologues on the subject of sex never failed to amaze male and female co-workers alike on the "Andy Hardy" set.

Nor was it just talk. While ostensibly residing with succeed in bankruptcy without really trying.

As Andy Hardy, Rooney, shown here with Lewis Stone, salted away $250,000 but can't touch it until he's 65.

During the early 40's Mickey and Judy were two of the hottest box office attractions Metro Goldwyn Mayer had.

his parents in the lavish home he built for them in Hollywood, the capsule Casanova in kneepants maintained a luxuriously-furnished apartment in Beverly Hills known only to a few cronies—and to a long list of models, starlets, waitresses and more lowly ladies of the evening. Mickey wasn't particular, he played the field. Soon sensational rumors of the most extraordinary goings-on in Andy Hardy's secret hide-away were floating around town.

When the studio finally got hep to the lusty love-life of its prize performer, it had a fit of hysterics. The juvenile Don Juan was hauled up on the carpet for a stern lecture on the morals and immorals of Hollywood, and the private obligations of a great star to his public. To protect its investment in this valuable property, MGM assigned a husky attendant to trail him around and make sure that he didn't get into trouble.

Not that Mickey ever needed any help, in case he did get into a jam. For all his small size, he was fast on his feet (he once won the junior tennis championship of the Pacific Southwest) and a wild man with his fists, when his temper was aroused. Experts who watched him work out with the gloves at the studio said he had all the makings of a professional fighter.

Shortly after his dressing-down Mickey met a tall, dark-eyed brunette beauty from the cotton-picking area of North Carolina. Originally imported to pose for a cheesecake art in bathing suits and scanty lingerie, she had managed to wangle a small role in a forthcoming MGM production. Her name was Ava Gardner.

Although she towered above his 5 feet 3 inches, to Handy Andy the lush lank lassie from the hill-country looked just dandy. After an ardent three-months courtship, she agreed to marry him. Their marriage took place in January 1942, and lasted just eight months.

Who was to blame for that bustup isn't known. Whatever it was Ava was looking for — and Mickey didn't have—she never has specified. A much-married lady herself since then, she apparently hasn't found what she wants in any of her other spouses, either. And for once the usually loquacious Rooney remains discreetly silent on this subject.

At any rate Ava was the first of a series of long-limbed lovelies to look down on the mighty midget of the movies and murmur "I do", while he stood on tiptoes to circle the third finger of the left hand with a wedding band. Mickey's curious predilection for elongated eyefuls in and out of marriage has led wits at the Mocambo to dub him "Hollywood's Big Dame Hunter".

Shortly after his first divorce, in 1943, Rooney entered the Army. He became one of the most popular in the Armed Services. The following year while in uniform he met and fell for another towering torso, Betty Jane Rase, a dark-eyed beauty who recently had been crowned Miss Alabama.

In a whirlwind, one-week courtship he completely swept her off her feet and married her. After a brief honeymoon, the new bridgroom went off to war. She was waiting for him when he was discharged from the Army in 1946, but they agreed to call it quits a year later. This marriage lasted just three years and eight months. Betty Jane, who has presented her husband with two boys, received a $100,000 settlement.

Analyzing the reasons for the breakup of this marriage, one Hollywood observer said at the time: "Mickey refuses to grow up. He still insists on playing the role of fun-loving Tom, one of the Rover boys."

So the Rover Boy, footloose and fancy-free, roved the town again keeping his eye peeled for female skyscrapers. He soon spotted a very seductive one, a tall, lithe, comely, blonde actress named Martha Vickers. When he married her after two months of steady dating, in June 1949, Rooney told newsmen:

"If I don't make it with this one, there's something radically wrong with me. I got me a swell gal this time, I guess I'm a lucky guy."

As it turned out, he was over-optimistic. Two years later, after she had presented him with another son, they agreed to call the marriage off. Mickey didn't reveal what was wrong with him, but Martha was not so reticent. She told the divorce Court:

"I don't think I saw him more than one or two nights every week. He would walk back into the house like nothing happened, without offering any explanation for his absence, and ask for his dinner."

The poor guy apparently was hungry.

Martha won custody of their child, and a generous settlement. She got the house, the family furniture and car, and alimony which rose gradually from $2,000 per month in 1951 to $3,000 per month in 1959—providing she didn't marry again.

Mickey was always an easy guy with the long green. "I believe the guy really enjoys shelling it out, marriage. He left me—for her."

Roslyn seemed to feel it was the old story of youth versus experience. At 25, she is at least 11 years younger than the Gallic charmer. Don is 31.

"She does have quite a few years on me," Roz meowed. 'And a lot more experience.'

Legally separated from Scott in 1959, she recently filed for divorce in Winston-Salem, N.C. Her petition accused the broker of "conducting an open and notorious affair with Corinne Calvet," of "living with her in Hollywood," and of being her constant traveling companion."

Now that Corinne has achieved her ambition of becoming the Other Woman, she's not as pleased with the role as she once thought she might be. In fact, she claims she was "misquoted" in her 1960 comments on the O.W. and American men.

"Americans make wonderful husbands, but they don't make good boy friends," is her revised version of the previous shipboard pronouncement on the subject of Husbands and Lovers. "Europeans make good boy friends, but not wonderful husbands."

He's Not Flattered

So far as Don Scott, her most recent American boy friend, is concerned, this evaluation doesn't sound very flattering. But that's just Corinne's way of saying things. Sort of fractured French, or enigmatic English.

A doll who loves to talk about l'amour, she has acquired the remarkable knack of looking sexy even while putting her foot in her mouth. And anyone who has ever tried this stunt knows how difficult it is.

A few years ago, for example, a magazine (not this one) described how she almost killed her husbands with boudoir kindness. Her mates, the article alleged, suffered from "overdoses of Calvet—not the famous French wine but Corinne."

Soon after the article appeared, Corinne appeared on a TV show and said she was "flattered" by the magazine's glowing account of her amorous acrobatics.

Later, she changed her mind and denounced the magazine at a sensational California trial. She also took a swing at American morals: "Maybe the moral standards in this country are higher, but things are more subtle in Europe."

Having sampled the moral climate on both sides of the Atlantic, Corinne certainly should know what she's talking about. Judge and jury apparently accepted her views as those of a qualified expert.

Since she came to this country 15 years ago, Corinne has been an exceptionally busy little lass. She has made a score of movies, wed and shed two actors, dated the playboy princes of New York and Hollywood, and appeared in many TV shows.

One of those video ventures was a thing called "Bait for the Tiger." But most critics agreed that with CC in the starring role, it should have been named "Bait for the Wolves."

In 1948, a year after the Parisian redhead first clicked in Hollywood, she married actor John Bromfield. The next few years were her biggest. When Rita Hayworth quit the films to become Princess Aly Khan, Corinne was billed as Rita's successor.

She had the same fiery hair, the same green eyes and sparkling smile, and an even better figure. Noting her marked resemblance to Rita, one movie critic observed: "She could be another Hayworth, except for the fact that she's brainier, sexier and more beautiful."

A Football Player?

Though Bromfield's career failed to keep pace with hers, Corinne didn't complain. In fact, she longed to give up acting so she could become an ordinary housewife and mother.

But when she told her husband she wanted children, he suggested she take up outdoor sports instead of motherhood.

No one who ever saw Corinne in a bikini or clinging negligee could compare her flawless build to that of a football player. And yet such a fantastic comparison was made by Corinne herself.

When she and Bromfield broke up after six years, she said they had grown so much alike "that we even look like each other."

Before he became an actor, Bromfield was a college football star. Corinne said their resemblance became so great that when they went to Europe people kept thinking they were brother and sister.

"I wanted a husband," she explained in divorce court, "not a look-alike brother."

The divorce was granted in Santa Monica, Cal., on March 16, 1954. Two weeks later, Corinne gulped too many sleeping pills and was rushed to a hospital. She later claimed it was an accident, not a suicide attempt.

Before her decree became final, she began a torrid romance with another actor, handsome Jeff Stone. They were in such a rush to get married that Corinne scampered south of the border and obtained a second divorce decree in Juarez, Mexico, thus paying the way for her to wed without the one-year wait required under California law.

As things worked out, she might just as well have waited for her final California decree.

In October, 1954, a couple of weeks after the Mexican divorce, Corinne and Jeff sailed for Europe. By this time, she had become a virtual trans-Atlantic commuter. Her fabled figure was almost as well known to Port of New York officials as her famous fellow-countrywoman, the Statue of Liberty.

Anyway, this 1954 junket—like her 1962 jaunt—was a combination business and pleasure trip. Between picture-making, she and Jeff hoped to find time for a quick wedding ceremony and a more leisurely honeymoon.

This wasn't as simple as they anticipated, however.

In Paris, they were informed their marriage license application would be stalled for six months because Corinne, a former French citizen, had failed to register her previous marriage and divorce with the French government.

Red Tape Romance

In Italy, they found a medieval castle at Bracciano, a picturesque lake town north of Rome. It was the perfect spot for a honeymoon, they decided. But again their application for a marriage license became snarled in official red tape.

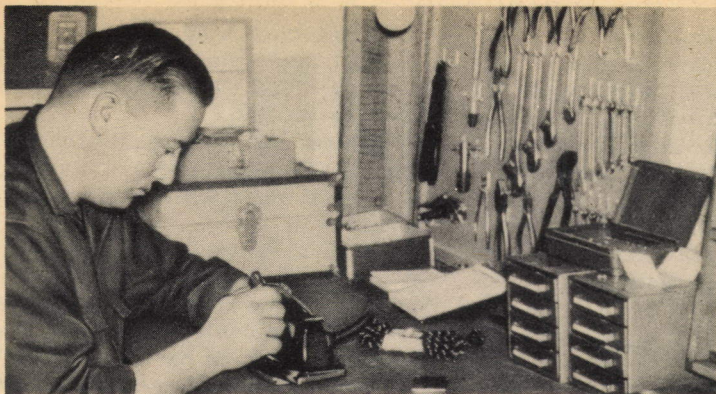

Next stop, Portugal. In Lisbon, they were told Corinne's visa was not in order. Therefore, their request for a license was delayed once more.

Finally, in desperation, the lovers leaped across the Mediterranean to North Africa. Five months after their hunt for a legal locksmith began, they were finally joined in wedlock at the U.S. legation in Tangier.

Fortunately for Corinne, she did a divorce as she did to get a merger permit. In 1959, she made her not have to work as hard to obtain second trip to Splitsville and quickly won a decree when she contended her rolling Stone had made her "an emotional mess."

To Corinne's credit, it should be noted that her domestic difficulties were seldom aired in public—unlike the marital bouts of most other Hollywood stars. But when it came to slugging it out with other glamazon, CC proved she could compete with the most avid headline-hunter.

And she had to do just that when she tangled with the Gorgeous

As of this writing no disposition has been made of the case.

Bo didn't have much to say about this incident but on other subjects he's just about the top pop-off guy in baseball.

"A lot of people think I'm some kind of nut or something," he said on one occasion, "because of all the crazy ink I've been getting. Sure, when I got out to California I went real Hollywood. There wasn't any reason for me not to. I'm single and a big league ball player and there are a lot of girls in that town. I bought a Cadillac. Then I pitched a no-hitter and everybody went wild. I got into trouble for staying out late. The ball club fined me $250, but I flied 105 of it back by hustling a guy in a pool hall in Kansas City."

About Boston, Bo has said, "Last week I went up to Boston and the papers had a story on me. Something about the Bright-lights Boy comes to Boston. I looked Boston over pretty good. The only bright lights they ever had in Boston was the lantern in the Old North Church."

Since hitting Hollywood, Bo has become the darling of the hip set and the special pet of Walter Winchell. When asked about his Cinema City friends he had this to say, "Sure I like the Hollywood thing. I didn't have to go after Hollywood. It came to me. I like money. It gives you independent ways. I like to pick my friends."

You Gotta Be Caught

In the minor leagues Belinsky had a reputation for throwing spit balls. When asked about that he answered this way, "I don't need the spitter up here. I have the screwball now. I don't feel like I cheated with the spitter. You're not a cheater until you get caught. If you can get away with cheating, more power to you. It's a cruel world."

As far as baseball is concerned, Bo can take it or leave it. In an interview he told one reporter, "When I grew up I was always gambling and betting, playing pool. It's not the dollar, it's the odds on the dollar. As a kid, I didn't know where the hell I was. I just didn't care. I have no drive or ambition. I'm from day to day, strictly from day to day. Baseball is tough for me because good habits don't come easy to me."

Belinsky spends his spare time in Hollywood girl watching on Sunset and Vine during the day and twisting in the town's bistro's by night.

He doesn't even shoot too much pool anymore. But that's not by choice. "All the guys heard about my pool and nobody'll shoot me a game," says he. "I guess I'll have to cool that bit for a while. I'm no nut. I'm just socially sharp."

"Socially Sharp"

And what does Angel manager Bill Rigney think of his "socially sharp" left-hander. "I can only say with the rest of the team," says Bill, "GREAT!"

2—INSIDE STORY — "BO BELINSKY"

Just what the screwball with the screwball will do next no one can predict. But one thing is certain. When the Angels mail out the contracts for next season, Belinsky's name will be pretty near the top of the list. "I don't think I'll ask for a raise anymore," says he tolerantly. "No, I'll let them come and ask me to take one."

And they probably will! ■ ■

do whatever Cary suggested. And the cold war would soon melt away.

Now 58, Cary has outlasted all other male movie idols and become a living legend. When he came to America some 35 years ago and began emoting on Broadway, the big names were John Gilbert, Ramon Navarro, Rudolph Valentino, Ronald Colman, John Barrymore, Douglas Fairbanks Sr.

Later, he had other competitors for the feminine vote—Clark Gable, Spencer Tracy, Gary Cooper, Errol Flynn ...

But Cary, like a modern Ponce de Leon who has really discovered the Fountain of Youth, keeps right on going as if he is ageless. Today, he is rich, famous and just as handsome as he was three decades ago.

For example, in his most recent movie, "That Touch of Mink," he plays the love interest of darling Doris Day. Their love scenes, filmed in Bermuda, reportedly were so realistic that Doris broke out in a heat rash.

"Touch of Mink," incidentally, was the 25th Cary Grant movie featured at New York's Radio City Music Hall in 26 years — a record unequalled by any other star.

When Cary recently signed for the part of Professor Higgins in the movie version of "My Fair Lady," he captured the acting plum of the year. His choice was a bitter blow to Rex Harrison and Richard Burton, both of whom badly wanted the role.

Cary Carries On

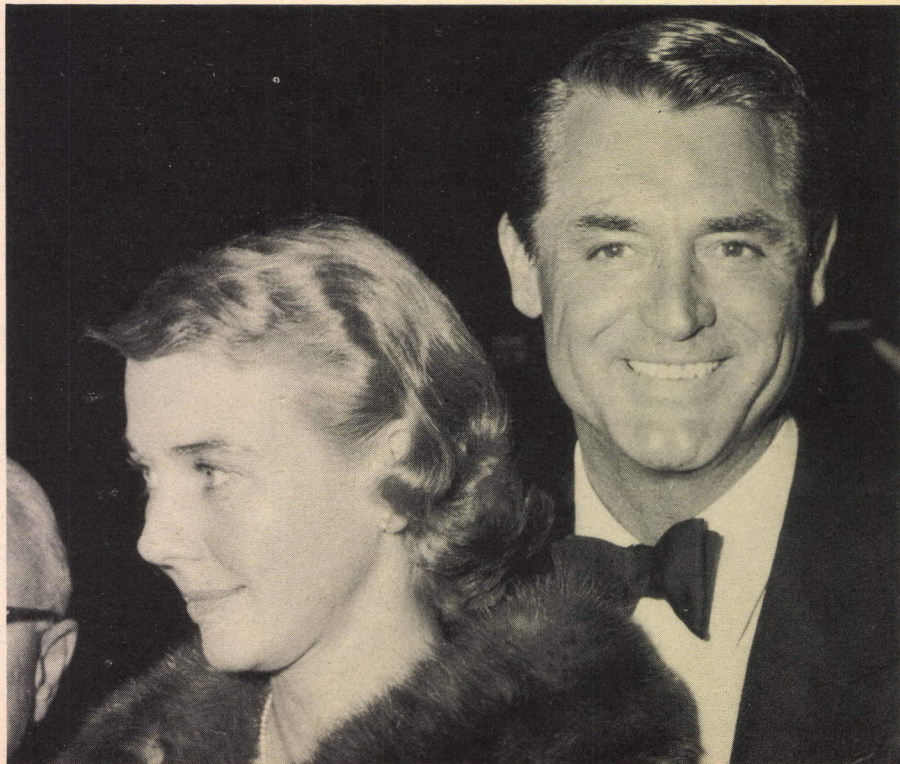

A British actor named Kenneth More was offered the Col. Pickering part, but he turned it down with the unsporting comment: "It's an old-man part and I'm much younger than Cary Grant."

Kenneth More (whoever he is), undoubtedly is correct in his calculations. But if he lives to be 200, he will never be another Cary.

Grant's power over the curvier sex is practically indestructible. Though he's almost 60, he has as many teen-age fans as Elvis, Fabian and Bobby Darin combined. The bobby-soxers still go for him just as their mothers and grandmothers did—and still do.

How does he do it? What's the secret of his perpetual youthfulness?

Cary Grant's third wife, Betsy Drake, got him interested in hypnosis and according to those who know him best this is his secret of eternal youth.

These are the questions Cary gets asked by almost every interviewer.

He owes his youthful looks, good health and slim, trim figure to a combination of things: Health foods, strenuous exercise, yoga, even self-hypnosis.

His third wife, Betsy Drake, got him interested in hypnosis. After reading a book on the subject, the blonde beauty hypnotized Cary and cured him of both smoking and heavy drinking. Now that Betsy's no longer around, he hypnotizes himself.

Shuts Out Noise

"I don't do it as a parlor trick," he explains, "but I employ a self-hypnosis when I feel it's helpful. I can shut off all sensation in any part of my body after a few moments of intense concentration. If I want to take a nap in my dressing room but the set is too noisy, for example, I simply make myself deaf to the outside sounds and put myself to sleep. Or I shut off sensation on the side of my mouth the dentist is working on. It comes in quite handy at times."

Betsy also introduced him to lysergic acid diethylamide (LSD), a drug used by many psychiatrists to achieve a sort of "instant analysis." Dr. Mortimer Hartman, Grant's psychotherapist, calls it a "psychic energizer which empties the subconscious and intensifies the emotions a hundred times."

Both Betsy and Cary began experimenting with LSD about four years ago. The drug changed their personalities, ironed out their emotional kinks — and, incidentally, broke up their marriage. When Betsy discovered she was no longer dependent on Cary as an emotional crutch, she walked out on him.

But Grant didn't waste time grieving. For LSD had opened his eyes to a wonderful future instead of a doddering old age.

"When I was a young man," Cary now says, "I deliberately tried to be charming. It was one of my actor's tricks. Now I know no man can be better than himself. I was always professing a knowledge I didn't have. I was an utter fake, a know-all who knew very little. I was very aggressive and bad-tempered, without the courage to be physically aggressive."

"I wanted money because I imagined it would bring me the adulation of women. Some of my friends were the richest people in the world

—Howard Hughes, Aristotle Onassis, Barbara Hutton, Doris Duke. But they weren't the happiest people in the world.

"Now, thanks to psychiatry and LSD, everything is changed. My attitude towards women and life is completely different. I don't intend to foul up any more lives."

"I know about women now as I never knew before. I know that a man and woman deliberately spoil something between them that is beautiful. You know how it is. A woman says, 'I wonder what would happen if I made him a little bit jealous.' The man says, 'Who was that fellow I saw you with on Thursday?' And it starts."

"We cannot stop hurting ourselves and each other by destroying the one thing we are all dying for—love and affection."

"Lonely men spend half their lives trying to attract women and all the time they are making it impossible to get the affection they so desperately need."

Lovelies Need Lovin'

"It is really so simple: Stay still and girls will flock to you—beautiful girls needing affection. If a man will simply recognize this need and show them that he has the same, that is all he has to do."

So there you have it, men—a secret as priceless as the secret of eternal youth. Cary Grant's secret of success with the lovely ladies, a knack which also keeps him looking so young.

"I could be a good husband now," Cary confides. "For the first time in my life, I am emotionally prepared to be in love."

"And I think that if I were married again I would like to become a father."

Why not? Clark Gable's first child was born shortly after Clark died at 59. Charlie Chaplin is still turning them out at 73.

Judging by his virile appearance in public and on the silver screen, Cary still has plenty of what it takes to be a proud parent.

Only one of his friends is skeptical—his last wife, Betsy.

"I don't know if he's ready or not," she says. "I'm not about to sit down and engage him in that discussion."

Maybe she should. If Cary goes to Washington, as another famous Grant did once before, Betsy may never get a chance to find out what a good father he might be. ■ ■

Mickey Rooney

even when he hasn't got it," one of his friends observed. "And when he's not married, the sky is the limit. Because that's where the tall girls are."

A scant year after his third divorce Mickey eloped to Las Vegas with Elaine Mahnken, a flame-haired 22-year-old model who was tall and terrific, like his other wives. That marriage hung up a record by lasting seven years. When they finally parted, Elaine blamed it on Mickey's Irish temper.

She won a divorce—and an unspecified alimony settlement—in May 1959. Mickey never was one to tarry long between marriages, but this time he was even speedier than usual. In fact he didn't wait for the divorce from Wife No. 4 to become final before he latched on to No. 5.

Some three weeks after Elaine's divorce, Mickey announced that he and pretty, young Barbara Thomasen had been quietly married the previous December. Which went that technically he was a bigamist for about six months.

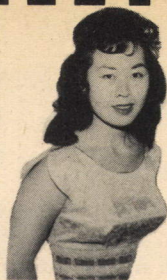

She's Shorter!

Even more noteworthy, however, is the fact that the little duffer at long last had changed the script and chosen a wife who could look up to him! At 5 feet 2 inches the current Mrs. Rooney actually is one inch shorter than her spouse.

Mickey's multiple matrimonial ventures have cost him a small fortune. The only one of his ex-wives who hasn't put the bite on him for alimony is Ava Gardner. It would sure take a lot of loving to make up for the kind of dough Mickey has had to shell out to his ex-wives.

Meanwhile for a long while the pint-size performer has been scraping the bottom of the Hollywood barrel. As his ex-business manager Red Doff put it:

"People just won't believe that he's not Andy Hardy any more. Here's a man who has done tremendous things over the years, yet he's

ATTACKED BY HER HOST

"She felt him in her arms before she knew he had entered the room. But being strong, she freed herself from his grasp and started striking, biting, and scratching. Afraid that she might call out, he tried to stop her mouth with bedclothes. But this he found impossible; for when she saw that he was using all his strength to work her shame, she did as much."

never been acknowledged by his own profession."

And that's why Andy Hardy had to declare bankruptcy.

Not Drastic

However Mickey's prospects for the future are by no means as grim as this drastic action might indicate. He recently played a leading role in the forthcoming film "Requiem for a Heavyweight." He is under contract for a good part in another film, "Mad, Mad, Mad World." He recently was offered $50,000 by a national magazine for first serial rights to his biography, and he turned down the offer, preferring to hold out for more money.

"His future is as bright as ever," declares Red Doff. "This guy will always be in demand by the public, whether the trade likes him or not."

Moreover Mickey doesn't have to worry about a penniless old age. A long time ago he set aside a $250,000 trust fund out of the fees he received for the "Andy Hardy" series. Of course he can't start drawing on that until he reaches the age of 65, but he should be able to live in comfort after that. Providing, of course, he doesn't get tangled up in more alimony commitments meanwhile.

There's one thing even his worst enemy has to say in favor of Mickey Rooney: he may be brash, he may be conceited and he may be loud, but he is endowed with plenty of guts, bulldog tenacity and more heart than the MGM lion.

"That kid will hang on with his teeth if he has to," the late John Barrymore once observed, referring to young Rooney.

Unfortunately the Great Lover didn't live long enough to see the prophecy come true. ■■

Doctor Death

on Mengele's operating table.

Dr. Miklos Nyiszli, Hungarian physician who was forced to serve as Mengele's laboratory assistant and to perform autopsies on his victims, had this to say of Doctor Death:

"He sent millions of people to death simply because, according to a racial theory, they were inferior beings . . . This criminal doctor spent many hours beside me, either at his microscopes, his disinfecting ovens and test tubes, or standing with equal patience over the dissecting table, his smock befouled with blood, his bloody hands examining and experimenting like one possessed."

Though his 'experiments' took up most of his time, they were performed without any method or logic. Frequently, he would cut a prisoner open, then lose interest in the project and walk away, leaving his victim to bleed to death in horrible agony. He sterilized hundreds of women, maimed and disfigured hundreds more by removing bits of bone and internal organs.

Twins and freaks were his special hobby. He collected twins, dwarfs, giants, hunchbacks and cripples the way other men collect stamps. They were used in experiments made for the Berlin Institute of Racial Biology.

He hoped to find the key to double births, envisioning a weird world where all German mothers bore twins and the Third Reich had an endless supply of dwarfs for domestic servants and docile giants for heavier slave labor.

He also collected gallstones, often killing people to get them, then polishing the stones like precious gems.

Collected Human Parts

He presented his beautiful, sadistic mistress, Irma Griesse, with a necklace of perfectly matched gallstones.

Irma, then 22, was known to Auschwitz inmates as the Angel of Death. A gorgeous blue-eyed blonde, she was commander of the women's section where Nora Eldoc was confined.

She always carried a gun and a silver-handled whip, which she used at the slightest provocation. Once she stripped and lashed a pretty Polish girl before the eyes of the girl's boy friend, a Soviet prisoner who had spurned Irma's amorous advances. Then she had the man shot and sent the girl to the Auschwitz brothel, a sex canteen for camp officers, guards and trustees.

Irma often accompanied Mengele on inspection tours and helped him make selections for the gas chambers. When his eye lingered on a young female prisoner, Irma was certain to choose this girl for a trip to the "bath houses." And yet she could scarcely have been jealous. Irma's many lovers included SS officers and prisoners of both sexes.

But the female prisoners who enjoyed her homosexual favors were promptly killed to keep them from talking about Irma's perversions.

Irma often boasted she would be a movie star in Germany after the war. But the only postwar production in which she starred was her own execution.

He Skipped Out

Mengele didn't stick around to watch her swing from an Allied gallows. He skipped out of Auschwitz in December, 1944, as Russian tanks neared the slaughter factory. Notifying his superiors that he had typhus, he rode to Berlin in a Red Cross ambulance.

With him went a fortune in jewels and gold tooth fillings torn from the bodies of the Auschwitz dead.

War crimes investigators later estimated Mengele personally sent more than one million persons to their deaths. In a single "delousing operation," he had some 10,000 Czech Jews killed because some of them supposedly had typhus.

On another occasion, he liquidated Women's Camp C to save food. It took 11 days to transport all 45,000 inmates to the gas ovens.

Though she was one of the few who survived Doctor Death's experiments, Nora Eldoc never forgave him. She vowed to bring him to justice, even if it cost her own life.

Eventually, she emigrated to Israel and worked in that country's documentation center on Nazi war crimes. Then she obtained a transfer to the Security Service.

Early in 1960, she learned a hand-picked team of Israel agents was planning a triple play in Argentina. They hoped to grab the Big Three of the Nazi underground organization in Buenos Aires — Eichmann, Mengele and Martin Bormann, who was Hitler's deputy.

But Mengele and Bormann proved too slippery for the Israeli dragnet, so the secret agents concentrated on catching Eichmann. As soon as they got him, the other two Nazis disappeared.

Mengele had a small chemical factory and a villa in the fashionable suburb of Vicente Lopez. Unlike the shadowy Bormann and the ever-cautious Eichmann, he lived openly without even bothering to change his name.

His friends included not only other fugitive Nazis but also respected members of B.A.'s social and international sets. Mengele's contacts, in fact, went just about as high as they could go.

For three weeks after the Eichmann kidnapping, he remained in hiding. Then he returned to Buenos Aires and resumed the role of a respectable doctor-turned-businessman.

Shipped Him Out

Israeli agents soon learned he was back in the Argentine capital, but they decided to wait until the furor over the Eichmann case died down. The West German government, acutely embarrassed by the Eichmann affair and its revival of Hitler horrors, also learned Mengele was back in B.A.

A previous German request for Mengele's extradition had been ignored by the Argentine government. In June, 1960, the request was repeated. And Argentine authorities, anxious to avoid another Eichmann-type incident, decided to ship Doctor Death back to his native land.

A federal judge in Buenos Aires issued an order for Mengele's arrest. But before the arrest warrant could be served, a newspaper broke the story. Alerted by the press and his police pals, Mengele took off for Brazil.

He arrived in Corumba early in July.

The small city made a perfect hideout. Situated in Mato Grosso State in western Brazil, it is just across the border from Bolivia and only a short distance from Paraguay. In other words, it is within easy jumping distance of two international frontiers.

It is large enough so a stranger does not attract too much attention; small enough so one cannot arrive without being noticed. Its population of 20,000 includes a fair-sized European colony, with the usual sprinkling of ex-Nazis. Finally, its mountain location gives it a mild, healthy climate.

But it was not healthy for Nora Eldoc.

Checking into Corumba's hotel, she contacted a wealthy Brazilian family whose name had been given her by the Israeli Embassy in Buenos Aires. Then she assumed the role of a wealthy European widow touring South America on the income from her late husband's estate.

At 48, she looked scarcely older than 35. The few grey hairs in her blonde coiffure were touched up to look like the rest. Her figure was still trim and firm.

His escape, a jump ahead of the law, prompted Nora Eldoc's superiors to send her to South America. As she knew Mengele personally, they felt she would have a better chance of finding him than other agents who had only his photo to guide them.

Besides, they reasoned Mengele wouldn't suspect a woman — and wouldn't recognize Nora as one of his Auschwitz guinea pigs.

Advised of the dangers involved, Nora brushed the warnings aside. This was the mission for which she had waited 15 years. She was determined to find Mengele and help bring him back to Israel for trial.

On The Trail

She arrived in Buenos Aires late in June, on a flight from Rome. Her first stop was the Israeli Embassy, where she scanned reports indicating Mengele had gone to Corumba, Brazil. Then she booked passage on a steamer sailing up the Plata, Parana and Paraguay Rivers to Corumba.

The thousand-mile trip was a long and tiring one, but Nora chose the river route because she had been told Mengele often traveled that way between Brazil and Argentina. On the voyage, she picked up additional information from people who knew Mengele by sight.

In this sleek, sophisticated woman, there was little trace of the half-starved, terror-stricken girl who had once lain naked on Mengele's operating table while he probed her vagina with needles and knives.

Nora was confident he would not recognize her. But her heart leaped and all the old terror returned when she finally found herself face to face with Doctor Death one evening at a cocktail party.

Still handsome, still smiling, he looked exactly the same as she remembered him. The silver streaks in his mustache and neatly-brushed hair merely added an air of distinction. While they chattered in German, she searched his face for some sign that his suspicions had been aroused by her presence in Corumba. She found none. He seemed to accept her portrayal of a lonely, globe-trotting widow.

A Tete-A-Tete

More than that, he seemed quite interested in her. Ignoring the other guests, he chatted with Nora until the party broke up. Then he invited her to dinner the following evening. He seemed about to walk into the perfumed trap.

In a report mailed to the Israeli Embassy in Rio de Janeiro for transmission to Security Service headquarters in Tel Aviv, Nora said she had located the Auschwitz extermination specialist. She said he had not recognized her.

Her next report, mailed two days later, said she was going on a picnic with Mengele the next morning. He had promised to show her some "spectacular scenery" in the mountains along the Brazil-Bolivia-Paraguay frontier.

This brief note was Nora Eldoc's last message. She was never seen alive again.

Unwilling to tip their hand, Israeli officials in Rio waited several days for another report. Then secret agents rushed to Corumba to investigate. They found Nora's clothes and luggage in her hotel room, but no sign of the missing woman.

Exit Nora

Some weeks later, a hunter found the decomposed body of a woman in a mountain cave near the Paraguay border. Officially, the body was never identified.

From her teeth, bone structure and other physical evidence, Israeli agents determined the corpse was Nora Eldoc. Her skull had been crushed by a savage blow.

Fifteen years after Auschwitz, she was murdered by Doctor Death.

Brazilian authorities made discreet inquiries in Corumba. They learned Dr. Mengele was on the move again. His estate outside the city was deserted, except for a German-speaking caretaker who patrolled the property with a shotgun and a fierce Alsatian dog.

The 15-room house and adjoining laboratory, where he had carried on his biology experiments without the human guinea pigs, were locked and shuttered. The swimming pool was dry.

Too late to save Nora, the grim manhunt was resumed.

In March, 1961, another Auschwitz survivor saw the mad doctor at Mar del Plata, seaside resort on the Argentine Riviera about 250 miles south of Buenos Aires. A tip to Israeli authorities brought five agents to the sun-drenched vacation spot.

The ISS men arrived in Mar del Plata by car on the afternoon of March 15. It was the peak of the sun-bathing season and the city's resident population of 115,000 had more than tripled.

The agents searched swank ocean-front hotels and back-street rooming houses. They combed the beaches, night clubs, restaurants and gambling casinos. They checked the cabana village at Bristol Beach, the private clubs at St. James Beach, the exclusive clubs and estates of Plaza Grande, even the outlying beaches frequented mainly by fishermen, gulls and lovers. But they found no trace of the fugitive fiend.

Dead Or Alive

When police learned the Israelis were in town, more than 100 provincial detectives and federal agents swarmed into Mar del Plata to see what was going on. Then four additional players entered the game—two Germans, one American, one Russian.

The Germans were from the West German War Crimes Office at Ludwigsburg. Their orders were to find Mengele and arrange his extradition. The American and Russian were intelligence agents from their respective embassies in B.A.

If Mengele was still in Mar del Plata, he could hardly have failed to notice all the police activity. And with more than 200,000 tourists in town, it would have not been difficult to slip through the dragnet.

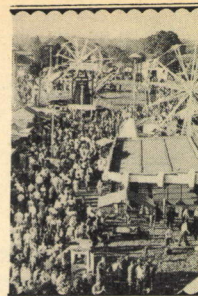

In recent months, he has been reported seen in Santa Catarina State in southern Brazil and in Paraguay, last of South America's pro-Nazi dictatorships.

Israeli agents are hot on his trail. And each day the trail goes shorter.

"We'll get him," predicts one of the commandos who caught Eichmann. "We'll get him — dead or alive."

Midway Malarkey

decides to show how easy it is to win, a subtle flick of his wrist squares up the block, and the hoop drops smoothly over.

In a variation of the hoop-toss, live ducks swimming about in a tank of water provide the target. The gaff in this one is more subtle, and it's provided gratis by Mother Nature. It is simply the fact that ducks aren't so dumb that they're going to allow themselves to be hooped without a quack. They quickly learn that when a person with a hoop in his hand draws back that hand, the hoop will momentarily be winging their way. As soon as a hand goes back, they dip their quackers, and the hoop sails harmlessly into the backdrop. The operator proves it can be done by feinting first, which causes the ducks to duck, then throwing the hoop before the duck can nod his neck again.

Step Up Suckers

Another variation of the hoop-toss is the clothespin joint. Here the targets are outsized clothespins clamped to a thick rope and bearing numbers, some of which correspond to a list of winning numbers displayed on the front of the booth. It's no trick to loop a winning clothespin; the trick here is to collect your prize after you've won!

The operator has carefully selected the winning numbers so that, turned upside down, they read differently. Thus if a person loops a number 18, for example, the operator deftly turns the clothespin so that it becomes 81. It's a pretty bare-faced racket, and needless to say, only big bruisers work the clothespin joint!

Pitching coins — any denomination up to a quarter — is another apparent game of skill that has a subtle gimmick built in. The idea is to toss the coin onto any one of a number of wide, flat pedestals and walk off with a ten-dollar teddy bear. "Nothin' to it," says the operator, as he tosses three or four coins onto the smooth surface. But Usually these are on the up and up, the trick not being so much strength as hitting the striker at the right angle to send the weight whistling up the wire to the bell. But sometimes someone who knows the knack starts winning one cigar after another, and though the operator can't lose since he's charging a dime and giving away a nickle cigar, he might throw in the gaff here by lessening the tension in the taut wire. The weight will vibrate going up and never reach the top.

Shooting Straight

One of the few games that are not gaffed are the straight shooting galleries — that is, those which are operated purely for fun and do not give away prizes. But you've still got to keep alert, for these places operate the universal gaff of carnivals the world over: the shortchange.

While shortchanging takes many forms, one of the most clever, in the hands of a smooth-talking operator, is the quarter count. It requires no sleight of hand, and it works this way:

You ask the operator for change of a five dollar bill. He takes out a handful of quarters and began to count them into your hand. "One, two, three, four . . . one dollar."

A pause here, then: "A dollar twenty-five, dollar fifty, dollar seventy-five . . . two dollars."

Another pause, then: "One, two, three, four . . ."

Placing emphasis on the word "four," the carny breaks off and reaches into his pocket for more quarters. He continues: "Four twenty-five, four fifty, four seventy-five, five dollars."

Watch Your Wallet

It has fooled many brilliant men. And if someone should count his change, the operator just reaches into his pocket, pulls out a bill, and says, "I'll have to give you a bill for the last one."

It should be clear by now that if you don't keep your eyes wide open and preferably aimed at your wallet, you're definitely going to get clipped at the fair. As Gresham says in his book, "One of the basic facts of carnival life is this: when any alluring bait is deliberately dangled in front of your nose, it has a hook on it."

Give that some thought before you chomp off a mouthful next time!

publicly about the affair.

Sue Ladd, Alan's wife of 13 years, however, took a more active stand. She walked out.

For weeks the gossip columns hinted at all sorts of explosions but once again June came through unscathed. What saved her was when the Ladd's patched things up, for perhaps the oddest reason any marriage was ever rescued. Alan came down with a case of chicken pox and called his ever-faithful, but estranged wife, to help him. Sue not only got rid of Alan's pox, she got rid of the chick too.

About that chapter in her life, June recently had this to say, "About five or six years ago there were many items in the columns linking me with Alan Ladd. What actually happened was that he was having problems, and I was sympathetic. Because of the nonsense in the columns Dick and I stopped seeing Ladd. Funny thing, he was Dick's friend, not mine."

By this reasoning Jack Lemmon must have been Dick's bosom buddy.

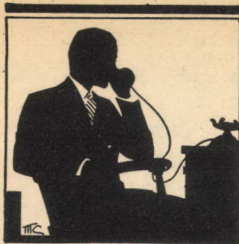

After the Ladd affair, Dick decided that a short leash on June was in order. And he figured the way to keep that leash tight was to spend more time with her. And how best to do that but to direct her pictures.

So he got himself the job of director on A Night To Remember starring June Allyson and Jack Lemmon.

He soon found out, however, that his presence on the set didn't slow Junie down even a little bit when halfway through the shooting she decided Lemmon was her favorite flavor.

"When they (June and Jack) were on the set, the phonograph in her dressing room would play for hours while the two of them were in there," one of the co-workers recalls. "They must have been talking, because that dressing room was too small for dancing."

Treating Dick like the little man who wasn't there, June and Jack openly held hands, sat together and gazed into each other's eyes like love-sick teenagers. Dick held his temper as long as he could but finally, when Jack flubbed his lines, he blew up and told him what he thought of his acting.

June leaped from her chair and flew at her husband, screaming, "Don't you dare talk to him like that!"

The movie making ended on a note that was becoming familiar to the Powells in general and June's playmates in particular. Lemmon and his wife got a divorce. They didn't say why, which left the matter open for the gossips to have a field day.

Once again, however, the Powells weathered the storm.

And maybe this is because June's man-chasing comes as no surprise to Dick. After all, didn't she actually chase him. Wasn't it she who insisted that they put their smooching on a legal basis.

But though June has been a bit of a gad-about she is not the only one who contributed to the plights and plagues of the Powells.

Dick, too, has done his share to keep the marriage on the rocks.

And though his straying has not manifested itself in another woman his way of life has, nonetheless, been pretty hard on June.

In the Powell household Dick is the dominant figure.

He chose the house they live in.

He decorated it.

He hires the domestic help.

He even plans the meals.

An example of Dick's utter disregard for June's opinions came when he purchased their sixty-three-foot cruiser. The boat cost $103,000. "I must have looked at a hundred and fifty boats with Richard," says June, "yet he wound up buying one I'd never even seen."

His work keeps him away from home more than is good for any marriage. When June calls to ask what time she can expect him, she's usually told, "I'll be there when I get through."

"Once," she told a reporter, "I said to our houseman, Frank, 'I haven't heard from Mr. Powell this afternoon. I guess he'll be home for dinner.' Frank said, 'Oh, we're having fifty people for dinner tonight. Mr. Powell called and told me what to serve.'"

Out of the fifty June knew exactly two.

Dick is a man not given to emotional outburst. He is never too sad or too happy. He rides a middle course.

This is the direct opposite of June's extremely sad or extremely happy personality.

When June informed Dick that she had to undergo surgery on her throat, he said, "Why worry about that, newsboys have that operation and then go back to work in the afternoon."

This remark made Junie pretty mad but as she was under doctor's orders not to talk, she said nothing.

But despite the weaknesses on both sides, the Powells plod on. They've had their differences, their separations and even a divorce, but they're still together.

Some say they're together because Dick doesn't want to part with the two and a half million dollars Junie would be awarded in the property settlement. Others say it's because of the children. Still others say it's because they're used to each other.

It could be for any, or all, of the above reasons.

It could also be because they dig each other.

It's possible, you know. ■ ■

Polaroid Parties

that a whole roll of film can be shot in the dark.

At the end of a given amount of time the lights are flashed on and the shots are examined.

If party A has more than one shot of party B, party A winds up as party B's bed partner. And the reason this is called Polaroid roulette is because party A and party B could both be boys or both be girls. And there just ain't no weasling out.

It's a real queer way of playing the game.

Once again, when all members are cozily ensconced in some corner of the room with their partners, be they of the opposite or of the same sex, the lights are turned off and the flashes start popping again.

The pics that come to light after one of these parties could blackmail a man or a woman for life. And that's the reason for the rule that all pictures must be destroyed before the premises are vacated.

Now there's no way of determining whether anyone is holding out but since they're all in the thing together it's a pretty good bet that all pics wind up in the sewers of the town.

These sex frolics are all very cozy—until the sheriff or the troopers get wind of them. Thus far, however, except for the isolated case in California, they haven't—simply because the passionate Polaroid playboys and playgirls keep their parties moving around like floating crap games.

"After all," said one of the California group, "who gets hurt. If we want to play the game, it's nobody's business but our own."

And, maybe he's right.

Meanwhile the Polaroid stock keeps going up and Up and UP!

Schell and Suzie Wong

"I don't have to ask how you feel about Max," a famous columnist told her. "Your face lit up when I mentioned his name . . . and does every time I repeat it."

Glowing like a Chinese lantern, Nancy replied:

"I hope his face lit up every time you mentioned mine — the dog."

No Proposal

As the romance dragged on without any new developments, item-hungry scribes thought they might be able to jar a proposal out of Max by beating him over the head. Some of them wrote that he had jilted Nancy.

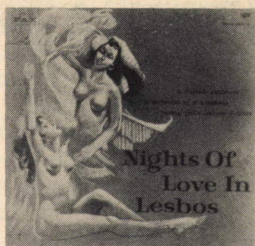

These items hurt her deeply, but failed to achieve the desired results.

"When it was printed that I ran away from her," Schell said, "she was like a lily that had its neck bent in a heavy storm."

To show Hollywood that the poison-pen artists were wrong, Nancy and Max put on an even more ardent show of togetherness than before. And all the old marriage rumors were dusted off and put back into circulation.

Not even their careers, it seemed, could separate the young lovers for long. On location in Europe, Nancy sneaked off the set frequently to phone Schell in Hollywood. When he went to Germany, she shuttled back and forth between London and Munich to be with him as much as possible. And he flew to London to visit her.

At Shepperton, England, last March while playing a circus bare-back rider, Nancy fell off a horse three times in 15 minutes. She suffered body bruises and a sprained ankle.

As soon as Max learned of the accident, he sped to her bedside with candy, flowers and words of good cheer. Nancy was so glad to see him that her large brown eyes filled with tears.

Now, if ever, was the Moment of Decision. And Max again let her down.

The Bard's Out

"The Chinese do not read Shakespeare, nor do they understand our music and writers," Schell told an interviewer around this time. "They have their literature, music and customs which we do not understand."

"Her family would be as upset as mine if we rushed into marriage."

Maybe Nancy doesn't read Shakespeare, but she reads the gossip columns. And she didn't need an interpreter to get this round-about message. Schell clearly had no intention of "rushing" — or even crawling — into an East-West merger.

However, he could not have been more wrong about Nancy not understanding Western ways. The only thing she couldn't understand was why the man who said he loved her didn't want to marry her.

Nancy actually knows as much about Western music, literature, art and customs as Schell does. Maybe more. Daughter of a wealthy Chinese architect and a beautiful Scotch-English fashion model, she was educated in a Hong Kong convent, and English boarding school and London's Royal Ballet School. She danced with the Royal Ballet for two years before returning home to Hong Kong to open her own dance school.

Then the cultured world of Nancy Kwan was suddenly changed by "The World of Suzie Wong." Touring the Orient for a suitable Suzie to star in the movie version of the Broadway show, producer Ray Stark ran an ad in a Hong Kong paper. Nancy showed up the next day to apply for the part.

Impressed by her fragile Eurasian beauty, stunning shape and the loveliest legs since Marlene Dietrich lifted her skirts for the French Foreign Legion decades ago, Stark signed her to a long-term contract.

A Long Trip

But before she got the Suzie role she had to travel around the world and back home to Hong Kong again.

First she went to Hollywood for acting lessons. Then to New York as understudy to France Nuyen in the "Suzie Wong" stage play. Then to Canada with a road company of the same show.

She was in Toronto when Stark phoned her from London and told her to catch the first trans-atlantic jet. France Nuyen, who had been tapped for the movie Suzie, was having trouble with the part, her weight and her emotions. Heartbroken over a busted romance with Marlon Brando, she was drowning her sorrows in calories.

The Yum-Yum Girl

Brought to London to replace her, Nancy finally hit the jackpot. Two years and more than 25,000 miles after she left Hong Kong, she returned in triumph as Suzie Wong, the soft-hearted YumYum girl.

Asked how she landed the part, she replied:

"The insurance people thinks it's because I'm the producer's girl friend. That's what people always think when an unknown gets the part, isn't it?"

"But the fact is I'm not Ray Stark's girl friend at all. I was under contract to him long before I was chosen for the picture."

To Hollywood-trained ears, such candid comments were as remarkable as a snowstorm in the Sahara. Uncertain what she might say next, studio officials put a high-powered publicity crew to work creating the "Nancy Kwan Image."

The flacks were told to give her the full "star treatment" and mold her into a combination Marilyn Monroe and Anna May Wong. They also had orders to intercept any more pearls of Oriental wisdom that might fall from her lovely lips.

The press agents wrote cute, funny and profound remarks for Nancy to use during interviews, depending on the questions. But Nancy had a mind, and a tongue, of her own.

Whatever she was asked she answered honestly, frankly discussing everything from Honk Kong brothels and American morals to women's fashions. Asked about her favorite costume, the split-skirt, high-collar Chinese dress called cheong-sam, she said:

"A cheong-sam has slits up the sides because Chinese girls have pretty legs. They like to show their legs. Japanese girls have pretty necks, so they wear a kimino with a collar away from the neck. American girls have big busts so they wear tight sweaters and low-cut gowns."

"The height of the slits in a cheong-sam skirt depends on what type girl you are. Suzie Wong, a Yum-Yum girl or prostitute, would wear skirts slashed to the thigh. My skirt slits are five inches high."

She Gets Better

Of the movie that made her an instant international star, she said: "It's a small picture, very unimportant but not too bad in general, but I'm lousy in it. Of course I've only seen it twice and I think I get better each time I see it."

And she dismissed Marlon Brando with the scathing comment: "I understand he likes Oriental girls, but I am not impressed. He means nothing to me."

While her refreshing candor endeared her to interviewers, the studio brass was kept in a constant state of suspense.

"We've got a million-dollar investment in this kid," one movie mogul grumbled. "We can't let her run around shooting off her mouth anytime she feels like it."

Her attitude towards her career worried the studio even more than her unrehearsed remarks. Though she was a full-fledged star in her first movie, Nancy was not particularly impressed. Privately, she told friends in Hong Kong and in Hollywood she'd gladly swap stardom for marriage.

All she needed was the right man. For a while, she thought she had found him in Maximilian Schell. But he didn't agree with her old-fashioned Oriental notions on Career versus Marriage.

Finally convinced Max would never marry her, Nancy began dating Peter Pock and married him on the rebound. This sudden move caught the artificial world of Nancy Kwan completely by surprise and sent its tinsel props tumbling.

Studio officials were afraid she would walk out on her contract after the costly buildup. Columnists, press agents and fan magazines were sore because they had no advance warning. No one in her Show Biz world had even heard of Peter Pock, Innsbruck innkeeper.

As for Maxi, who should have realized what would happen, he was the most surprised one of all. But the explanation was simple enough:

Nancy simply got tired of playing the old Schell game. ■■

Elvis Presley

through the fans hovering about him, Elvis dropped into a chair for a few minutes rest, then, picking up his cronies, he headed for the nearest exit.

"Oh Elvis," screamed one of the bobby soxers, "wait for me."

He turned and saw a pretty young bobby soxer dashing after him.

When she caught up to him she pulled her blouse off her shoulders, revealed a low cut bra and asked, "Would you please autograph me?"

Older and wiser entertainers may have hesitated having a three quart bare bosom thrust at them for a signature. But not Elvis he grabbed the pen and signed. Elvis, on the righty and Presley on the leftie.

Torso-graphs

This chick was the first to have her torso so inscribed but she was, by no means, the last. As a matter of fact one doll went so far as to bare enough of her chest for Presley to have inscribed the entire Gettysburg Address. But to his credit it must be said that he did no more than write his name.

These gals only gave Presley writing room because his name was Elvis Presley and because he was a rich and famous entertainer but that didn't stop him from making with the torso-graph.

And then there was the model who asked to be introduced to Elvis while he was appearing at the New Frontier Hotel in Las Vegas.

When they met, she said "hello." Elvis said nothing but he grabbed her hand, started nibbling on her fingers, kept going up her arm and didn't stop until he was nuzzling her ear. It wasn't exactly a "How do you do," but the gal got the message.

Later on that night Presley invited her to his room and, to put it in the gal's own words. "He took my breath away. Then everything else . . . I barely had time to get my shoes off. Elvis may be only a boy—but what boy. Now I know what he means when he sings Love Me Tender. It went on for hours until Elvis suddenly realized he had another show to do. Popping into his clothes he asked me to wait until the show was over."

Once again Elvis used his position to take his love and once again it didn't bother him.

Experience like the above qualified Elvis for the big leagues and when he returned from the army he made his presence known among the dolls of Hollywood.

Presley's first picture when he returned from the service was G.I. Blues. Juliet Prowse was his co-star. Another singer named Frank Sinatra had the inside track with this gal but the INSIDE STORY is that this didn't bother Elvis at all. As one columnist put it, "Elvis is right in there wooing and cooing just as though Sinatra didn't exist. One week-end Juliet spent with Elvis in Las Vegas, another she spent with Frank — no one is sure where."

Where she went with Frank and what she did is of no consequence here. But the fact that Elvis got into the act proves that the army hadn't changed the hip swiveler.

The gal who probably knows Elvis better than any other is a pretty Southern belle named Anita Wood. They grew up in Nashville together. And though she has been romantically linked with him time and time again, nothing has ever come of the romance.

Even while he was making time with Connie Stevens he was seeing Anita on the side.

"It was plain that he considered Anita someone very dear," itemed one correspondent, "On the set they were as playful as kittens. He teased her, cavorted with her, broke up over private jokes they shared. She'd chase him. He'd chase her. He'd overtake her with a hug and a kiss. It was all very breathless and touching."

All very breathless and touching indeed!

But Anita went back to Nashville without a ring on her third finger left hand. She knew Elvis wasn't the marryin' kind and, as we said before, she knows him better than any other girl.

Further evidence that Elvis is not thinking of settling down can be seen in his quick retort to the mother of a debutante from Pasadena whose name was romantically linked with Presley's. The mother announced that Elvis had asked her daughter to wait for him until such time as he could make her permanently his.

Now a guy who really was serious about "finding the right girl" would have ignored the remark. Who knows, she may have been the right one. Instead M. Presley snapped, "I got 25 girls I date regular. She's just one of the girls."

Does that sound like a guy who wants to get married. It sure doesn't. Any fellow with a harem of 25 lovelies certainly isn't looking to get tied up with just one.

Elvis' secret attraction to the fair sex, then is very simple. By constantly harping on the fact that he can't find a girl to love him for himself alone he appeals to the mother instinct in the female.

And anyone who knows anything about females knows that this is the fastest route to the boudoir.

Up to now this system has worked very well for old bump and grind Presley. But the truth of the matter is that Elvis has no intention of getting married until he is too old and too exhausted to totter into bed.

He made this abundantly clear in an early and unguarded interview when he said, "Why buy a cow when you can steal milk through the fence?"

And certainly when it comes to "stealing milk" Elvis has no peer. ■■

Hollywood's Brats

for $500,000 advance against 10 per cent of the picture's gross, with $5,000 overtime for every day the making of the film ran overtime. Before it was finished, he had collected $1,250,000. As Milestone wryly remarked:

"This picture should be called 'The Mutiny of Marlon Brando!'"

Though Taylor, Brando and Monroe are the most recent, they are by no means the only temperamental stars in Hollywood to give producers ulcers on their ulcers, drive them to the verge of a mental breakdown and bring the studios to the brink of bankruptcy.

Take Monty Clift, who has been a problem to just about every director, producer and studio with whom he has been associated. While on location in "Raintree County" (which he did with Liz Taylor) he hit the bottle so heavily that postponements of scheduled shooting cost MGM a small fortune.

More recently, while filming "Freud" in Munich, he developed a psychological block and couldn't remember his lines. Then he suddenly disappeared. Director John Huston finally tracked him down to London. To get the film completed, Huston had to hire a psychiatrist who put Monty under hypnosis, and by use of post-hypnotic suggestion actually succeeded in getting him to remember his lines!

To keep a temperamental star contented and working, the studios often have to go to fantastic lengths in providing such lavish fringe benefits as the best in living quarters, servants, expensive transportation and other tidbits.

A Wad For A Whim

Yul Brynner's contract for example provides that whenever and wherever he is working, the studio must provide him with a shiny black Cadillac, complete with uniformed chauffeur. When the bald-domed star was on location in Mexico with "The Magnificent Seven," the studio scoured the country but was unable to come up with a suitable Cadillac. It offered him a brand-new Imperial instead, but he rejected it and refused to go to work until a Cadillac was imported for him, all the way from Hollywood!

Jackie Gleason's demands are even more astounding, usually occupying numerous pages of any contract he signs.

His contract for "Gigot" specified that a specially-built Rolls Royce would be ready and waiting when he arrived in Paris to make the film. The car was to be finished with 46 coats of opal and burgundy paint (each coat hand-rubbed with loving care). It had to be air-conditioned and equipped with a refrigerator, fully stocked bar, TV set, hi-fi and radio-telephone. The studio had to furnish his chauffeur with a specially designed uniform to match the car, and send him to the Rolls Royce school in London for three weeks where he received special training in driving the car!

The contract also provided that while in Paris he and his numerous entourage would be put up in the fanciest available living quarters. The studio rented the late Aga Khan's villa in Versailles for him, and redecorated it. He didn't like it, so he was transferred to the penthouse of the swank King George V Hotel. In order to make room for him, a Texas oil millionaire was persuaded to move out. Gleason's hotel bill alone amounted to over $60,000.

An avid devotee of Dixieland, Gleason insisted that the studio also provide him with a private Dixieland band to play for him whenever he was in the mood for music, day or night. It cost the company $1,000 per week to provide him with the band, but he got it!

All which brings up a very pregnant question: who's the boss in Hollywood these days, the studios or the stars?

The INSIDE STORY is, movie moguls have suddenly discovered that in promoting the star system they have created a Frankenstein which is driving the entire film industry into bankruptcy. And today they are girding their loins for a battle which may well determine the entire future of the industry in this country.

The opening guns of that battle went off recently when 20th Century-Fox, one of the leading proponents of that system, fired Marilyn Monroe and sued her for $500,000 for breach of contract because of her performance (or rather non-performance) in "Something's Got to Give."

Equally significant was the forced resignation of Spyros Skouras as president of the same studio, a few days later. It was Skouras, more than any other individual in movie-land, who is responsible for the terrific buildup given such stars as Marilyn Monroe and Liz Taylor.

It's Gotta Stop

Sure enough, something's got to give, and the industry is determined it will be the spoiled brats it has pampered for so long because it was running scared of the burgeoning TV interests.

Typical of the New Look in the film capital is the comment by producer-director Robert Wise, in a recent interview with a national magazine:

"I think the 'Mutiny on the Bounty' problems with Brando, plus the problems with Elizabeth Taylor in 'Cleopatra,' may well make the end of the star system as it exists in Hollywood today. The big-star monopoly—the monster that we ourselves have created out of our fear of television—has now become such an expensive luxury loaded with trouble that it's just not worth it.

"I for one am discarding it. I am doing my next two films on modest budgets with no stars whatsoever. I think this is the new pattern for the industry—a turning point for all of us. More and more of us are saying, 'The hell with the star, I'll make little black-and-white pictures with good scripts and unknown actors.'

"We must do that to survive. A few more mutinies by stars and we'll all be out of business."

If his prediction comes true, the Hollywood heavens will soon be full of falling stars. ■ ■

Nominated for Oblivion

Of all the news that's unfit to print, photographs are often the worse. Here's the best of the worst!

THE Encyclopedia Britannica describes the hand as "the terminal part of the human upper limb, consisting of the wrist, the fingers and the palm." But if you think that "terminal" means end, take it from IN-SIDE STORY you don't know press agents. To us average schmoes hands may be used for eating, catching, even caressing. The movie pipe-dreamers send in hand-outs to make the editors hand out valuable space that should be bought and not given away. Herewith a collection of the gems that have passed over your editor's desk. Mark them well, enjoy them while you may. For they won't pass here again. They've been nominated for oblivion.

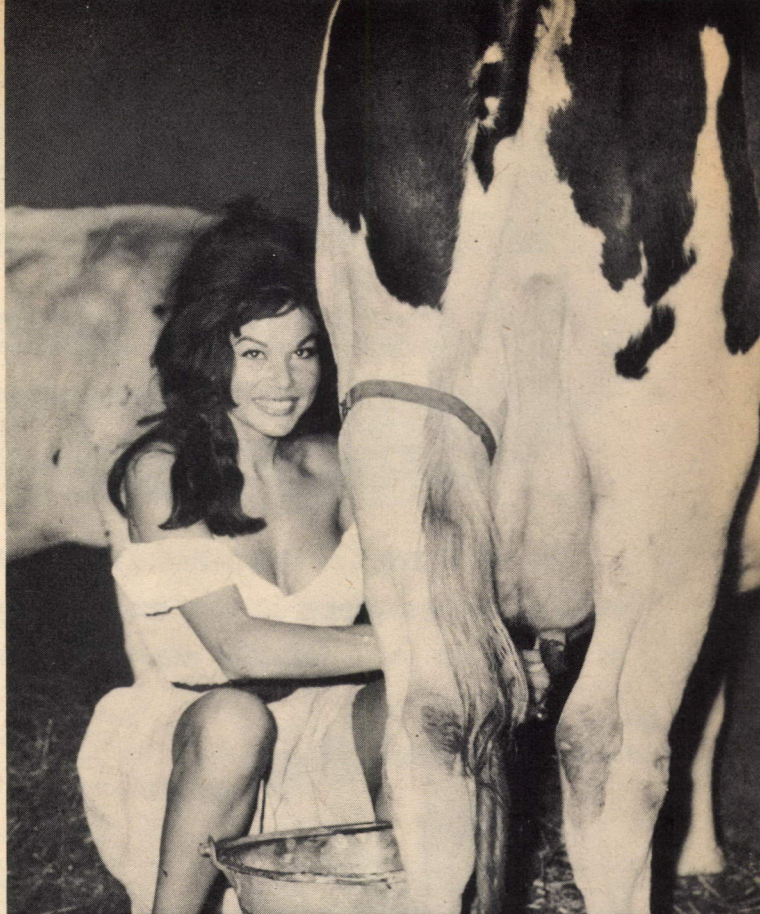

Getting "wired for sound", leggy actress Julie Newmar is fitted with concealed microphone equipment by a TV technician. (He gets paid for the job, too!) Mike was hidden under Julie's skirt when she appeared in recent "Person to Person" show on CBS.

This photo of actress Kim Novak was released during the heat wave that engulfed the country last summer. It was ballyhoosed as Kim's answer to the weather. Actually it is a publicity shot for the film "The Notorious Landlady", in which Kim revives the traditional Hollywood bathtub scenes. It is reported that she spent two weeks filming the scene at Columbia "without wearing even a flesh-colored bathing suit."

The photographer ran out of excuses for this shot of 18-year-old French starlet Marie Ange Mariani sunning on the beach at Nice. All he could think of is: "With such lovelies decorating the shores, it shore is nice in Nice." Maybe no excuse is necessary. As Confucius say: "One hot picture speak louder than 10,000 words."

Desperate press agent put on squeeze play to get publicity for German-born actress Laya Raki, vacationing in Rome with her husband Ron Randell. No bull, she's proving that she's really just a country girl at heart. Don't squeeze too hard, Laya!

DECORATION NOVEL NAVEL

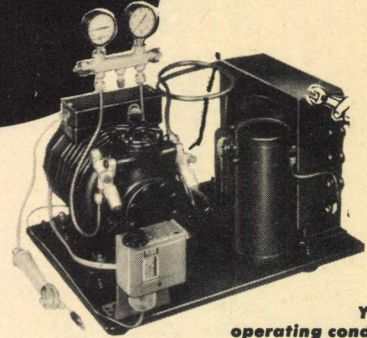

Dressed in "BB (Brigitte Bardot) Uniform", these young lovelies expose their bare mid-ribs in a zany contest at the Unicorn Club at St. Tropez, France. Each girl had a unicorn eye painted on her navel. Judges were supposed to select the most decorative and the most decorated navel. After careful scrutiny, they called the contest a standoff. They said that they loved them all!

Important news for the inexperienced man who needs a short cut to a better job, more money and greater security.

"A demand for many thousands of additional mechanics who can install, maintain, and repair air-conditioning and refrigeration equipment is expected in the 1960s," the U.S. Dept. of Labor reports. "The use of air-conditioning in offices, stores, and theatres is increasing tremendously. In homes, the number of centrally installed air conditioning units doubled between 1957 and 1960."
